ABOUT

Hello! I'm Emily.

My first job in high school job was at Hallmark (I've always loved paper), but I never once bought a card. The cards were too generic, and didn't represent me. So I ended up drawing my own cards—often food puns, based on the things I love to eat (and cook!)

Fast forward 25+ years later, I'm still making cards—but now as the founder of Brightspot, where we bring Asian American representation to the stationery world. Our products add much-needed diverse cultural perspectives to an industry ready for fresh voices.

In fact, customers tell us they feel seen; they feel proud to be Asian because they identify themselves in the art, and in the food and the culture behind it.

Our ultimate goal is resonance: your friend laughing over a sushi pun birthday card, your kids proud to show off their backpack with a bubble tea pin. We're creating bright spots in the everyday—little moments of joy, recognition, and connection.

Thanks for being here!

Emily Chan
