CELEBRATION OF COMMUNITY

Honors Leaders Who Strengthen Greater Montgomery County

The Chamber of Commerce for Greater Montgomery County proudly celebrated the individuals and organizations making an extraordinary difference throughout our region during the 2026 Celebration of Community Awards. This event recognizes the leadership, innovation, service, and commitment need to build stronger communities. This year's celebration featured a panel discussion with each award recipient sharing with the audience ways they have collaborated with our community to create positive impact.

CORPORATE CITIZENSHIP AWARD

Altek Business Systems

Recognized for creating a culture where community engagement is part of the organization's DNA. Rather than directing volunteer efforts from the executive level, Altek empowers employees to identify the causes they care about most. From supporting nonprofits with technology and addressing food insecurity to mentoring youth and volunteering with animal rescue organizations, Altek demonstrates that businesses thrive when they invest in the communities where they live and work.

HOMETOWN HERO AWARD

Chief Michael Trail

Honored for his outstanding service and leadership during his eight-year tenure as Chief of the Lansdale Police Department. Now serving with the Norristown Police Department, Chief Trail shared the three principles that guide his leadership: a commitment to strong processes, accountability through the belief that "Everything Matters," and building trust in every interaction. His message served as a reminder that trust is earned one conversation at a time.

INNOVATION IN ACTION

Carol Bauer, COO & Founder of Garden of Health Inc.

The Chamber introduced a new award this year to recognize individuals turning innovative ideas into meaningful community solutions, became its inaugural recipient. Inspired by her daughter's celiac disease diagnosis,

Carol created an organization that addresses food insecurity for individuals with dietary restrictions. What began as an eight-bed garden in Souderton has grown into a regional resource providing education, fresh food, and healthier outcomes for families across Montgomery County.

COMMUNITY SERVICE AWARD

Donna Richemond

Recognized for her dedication to creating a more inclusive and accessible community. Through her leadership and service, Donna champions the belief that communities are stronger when every individual has the opportunity to participate and contribute. As a member of the Chamber's Inclusion Committee, she helps lead the annual Rising Stars program and Minority and Small Business Summit, expanding opportunities for future leaders and entrepreneurs throughout our region.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR LEADERSHIP AWARD

Keith Sterling, former Executive Director of Habitat for Humanity of Montgomery and Delaware Counties

Honored for his leadership while at Habitat for Humanity. Keith encouraged businesses to recognize that community impact is not one-size-fits-all. By connecting volunteer opportunities with people's skills and passions, he has demonstrated that meaningful partnerships can transform communities. As he shared during the panel, "90% of the people you talk to want to help, they just don't know how." Strong partnerships between non-profits, business professionals who align with your mission and the residents within our community pave that path forward.

The Celebration of Community Awards reflect the Chamber's mission to connect community and regional businesses while recognizing those who lead with purpose, inspire collaboration, and create opportunities for others. Together, these five honorees remind us that stronger communities are built through leadership, innovation, service, and a shared commitment to making a difference.

INVESTING IN YOUR EMPLOYEES:

Why Tuition Reimbursement Pays Off for Montgomery County Employers

By: Gaetan Giannini, Ed.D.

Employer-sponsored tuition assistance is often viewed as a nice-to-have benefit, a line item that shows up in an employee handbook and little else. In reality, it is one of the most cost-effective workforce development tools available to Montgomery County businesses today, and the data backing that claim is substantial.

Consider retention. A widely cited National Bureau of Economic Research study found that employees who participate in tuition reimbursement programs are significantly less likely to leave their employers. That finding runs counter to the old assumption that a more credentialed employee is a flight risk. Instead, employees who feel invested in tend to invest back in the organization that supported them.

The financial case is equally compelling. The Lumina Foundation has documented returns exceeding 129 percent on employer education investment once reduced turnover, lower hiring costs, and internal promotions are factored in. Compare that to the expense of recruiting, onboarding, and training a new hire from scratch, and the math favors developing the talent already on the payroll.

Tuition assistance also builds the internal pipeline. Employees who pursue degrees while working are more likely to move into higher-responsibility roles, which matters most in sectors facing specialized skill shortages: healthcare, finance, manufacturing, technology, and logistics all figure prominently among this region's employers. National examples bear this out. Amazon's Career Choice and AT&T's Workforce 2020 program have both used education benefits to build cloud computing, cybersecurity, and data analytics talent internally rather than compete for it externally. Walmart, Starbucks, Siemens, and John Deere have taken similar approaches to reduce turnover and create supervisory pathways from the front line up.

Beyond the balance sheet, these programs shape culture. Employees who receive support for continued education report greater initiative, motivation, and commitment to organizational goals. In a labor market where skilled candidates have options, a visible, well-communicated education benefit differentiates an employer and signals a genuine investment in people, not just positions.

For Montgomery County organizations weighing whether to launch or expand a tuition assistance program, the keys to success are straightforward: define eligibility and reimbursement policy clearly, align program scope with real business needs, track utilization and promotion outcomes, and make sure managers actively support employees balancing coursework with a full workload. Programs that meet these standards consistently outperform those treated as a passive perk.

The organizations in our region that get this right are not just filling seats in a classroom. They are building the leadership bench, the technical expertise, and the institutional loyalty that will carry them through the next decade of workforce competition. For local employers looking to strengthen retention and internal mobility, there has rarely been a better moment to invest in the people already on the team.

Alvernia University is proud to partner with Montgomery County employers as a workforce development resource. Our adult, graduate, and online programs, including our MBA, are purpose-built for working professionals balancing career and coursework, offering flexible formats, accelerated timelines, and credentials that translate directly into promotion-ready skills for today's regional employers.

ZERO-CLICK Marketing Is the Future: How to Position Your Business

businesses near me

By: Alex Kim

For two decades, Google Search was the front door to local businesses. That is changing. More and more, people get their answer without ever clicking a website. They ask ChatGPT, watch a YouTube video, read a Reddit thread, or read the AI summary at the top of the Google page, and they decide before they ever land on your site. That is what “zero-click” means: the search still happens, but the click to your website does not.

Zero-click marketing is the response. Instead of waiting to be found in search, you show up and build trust where your customers already spend their time. Close to half of all searches are people looking for a business they already know by name. By the time someone searches for you, the decision is mostly made. They formed their opinion earlier, on the platforms where they research: ChatGPT, YouTube, Facebook, Reddit, Instagram, and the people they follow. Zero-click marketing is about being present in those places, before the search happens.

Here is what that looks like. A homeowner needs a roofer, so they ask ChatGPT or Google for the best one in their area and get back three names. If you are not one of those three, you were never in the running, and you never even knew the search happened. The businesses that get named are the ones people already know and talk about.

Think about it. There is more information out there than any one person could ever read, so our brains look for shortcuts. We all have our health guy, our fitness gal, our news podcaster, our parenting channel. We know them, we like them, we trust them. Your job is to become that person for your field, whether that is real estate, insurance, plumbing, or roofing. The more people know you as the expert, the more your business grows.

So how do you get there? A few quick actions you can take:

- Answer the real questions your customers ask. Turn the ten questions you hear every week into short videos, posts, and pages.
- Put a real face on it. A person explaining what they know earns more trust than a logo.
- Show up where your customers already are. Pick one or two platforms they actually use and post consistently.
- Get referenced in more than one place. Reviews, directories, and other people mentioning you are what search engines and AI use to decide who to trust.
- Keep your Google profile, reviews, and listings accurate, since that is often the answer people see first.

Workbench SEO works with businesses on exactly this. We learn who your customer is, where they look for information in your industry, and how they decide. Then we build the campaigns that put you in front of them and make you the name they already trust. Become the expert in your field.

COOKING FOR A CAUSE

Understanding your CREDIT SCORE & why it is important

4400 1596 0003 0210 3156

Financial wellness means having control over your finances, feeling secure about your financial future, and having the flexibility to maintain your standard of living. It includes being prepared for major life events such as a wedding, college or higher education expenses, buying a home, and staying on track for retirement. Budgeting, debt management, and long-term financial planning all play an important role in reaching short- and long-term financial goals. There are many local Chamber of Commerce professionals that can provide valuable guidance, and I recommend using these resources to help ensure you stay on track.

Understanding your credit score is essential to achieving long-term financial goals and overall financial wellness. Credit scores are one of the main factors banks and financial institutions use when deciding whether to extend credit and what interest rate to offer.

The primary factors most credit agencies consider when calculating a credit score are:

- (35%) Payment History.
- It is crucial to pay your bills on time; this is the main portion of the overall credit score calculation and most important.
- (30%) Credit Utilization.
- Utilizing your credit accounts represents thirty percent credit score calculation.

- This is primarily focused on the borrowers revolving credit availability and usage. It is important to have revolving debts including credit cards and to utilize them and make payments on time. The recommended balance on revolving debts is less than 30% of the total overall available credit limits.
- (15%) Length of Credit History.
- It is important to establish a credit history and maintain long-term relationships with financial institutions.
- (10%) Credit Mix.
- It is important to have a history of repaying installment loans and revolving debts. Installment loans traditionally offer fixed terms and rates.
- (10%) New Credit.
- Borrowers should avoid opening too many credit lines in a short period of time. It is recommended that borrowers add additional credit only when it is required or makes financial sense.

Knowing your credit score and monitoring your credit accounts can help you improve your credit and protect against fraud and identity theft. Many credit card companies provide customers with free credit scores, and some financial institutions also offer free access to credit reports.

The costs of a low credit score go beyond higher interest rates on loans and credit cards. Employers, insurers, landlords, and business lenders may review credit history, which can affect job opportunities, insurance premiums, rental approvals or rates, and business loan terms or approvals.

Low credit scores can lead to higher rates on mortgages, auto loans, personal loans, and credit cards, adding hundreds of dollars per month or thousands per year.

Hardship. If you experience a financial hardship and may not be able to meet your payment obligations, contact your lender as soon as possible to discuss their hardship policies.

Improving credit scores. The good news is that credit scores can improve with a focused plan. Some issues may be resolved in the short term, while others may take several years to correct. The first step is to review your credit report. The federal government provides free annual access to your comprehensive credit report at www.AnnualCreditReport.com. Review it carefully for errors and confirm that all listed debts are being repaid. It is also important to maintain a budget that identifies available monthly funds, including discretionary income that can be used to pay off any collection accounts found on your credit report.
