THE ANDEAN region

The Andes stretch across three mountain ranges, shaping valleys, canyons, paramos, cloud forests, and some of Colombia’s most distinctive towns.

Life here has adapted to the mountains, from coffee farms on steep slopes to towns built along winding roads and hillsides.

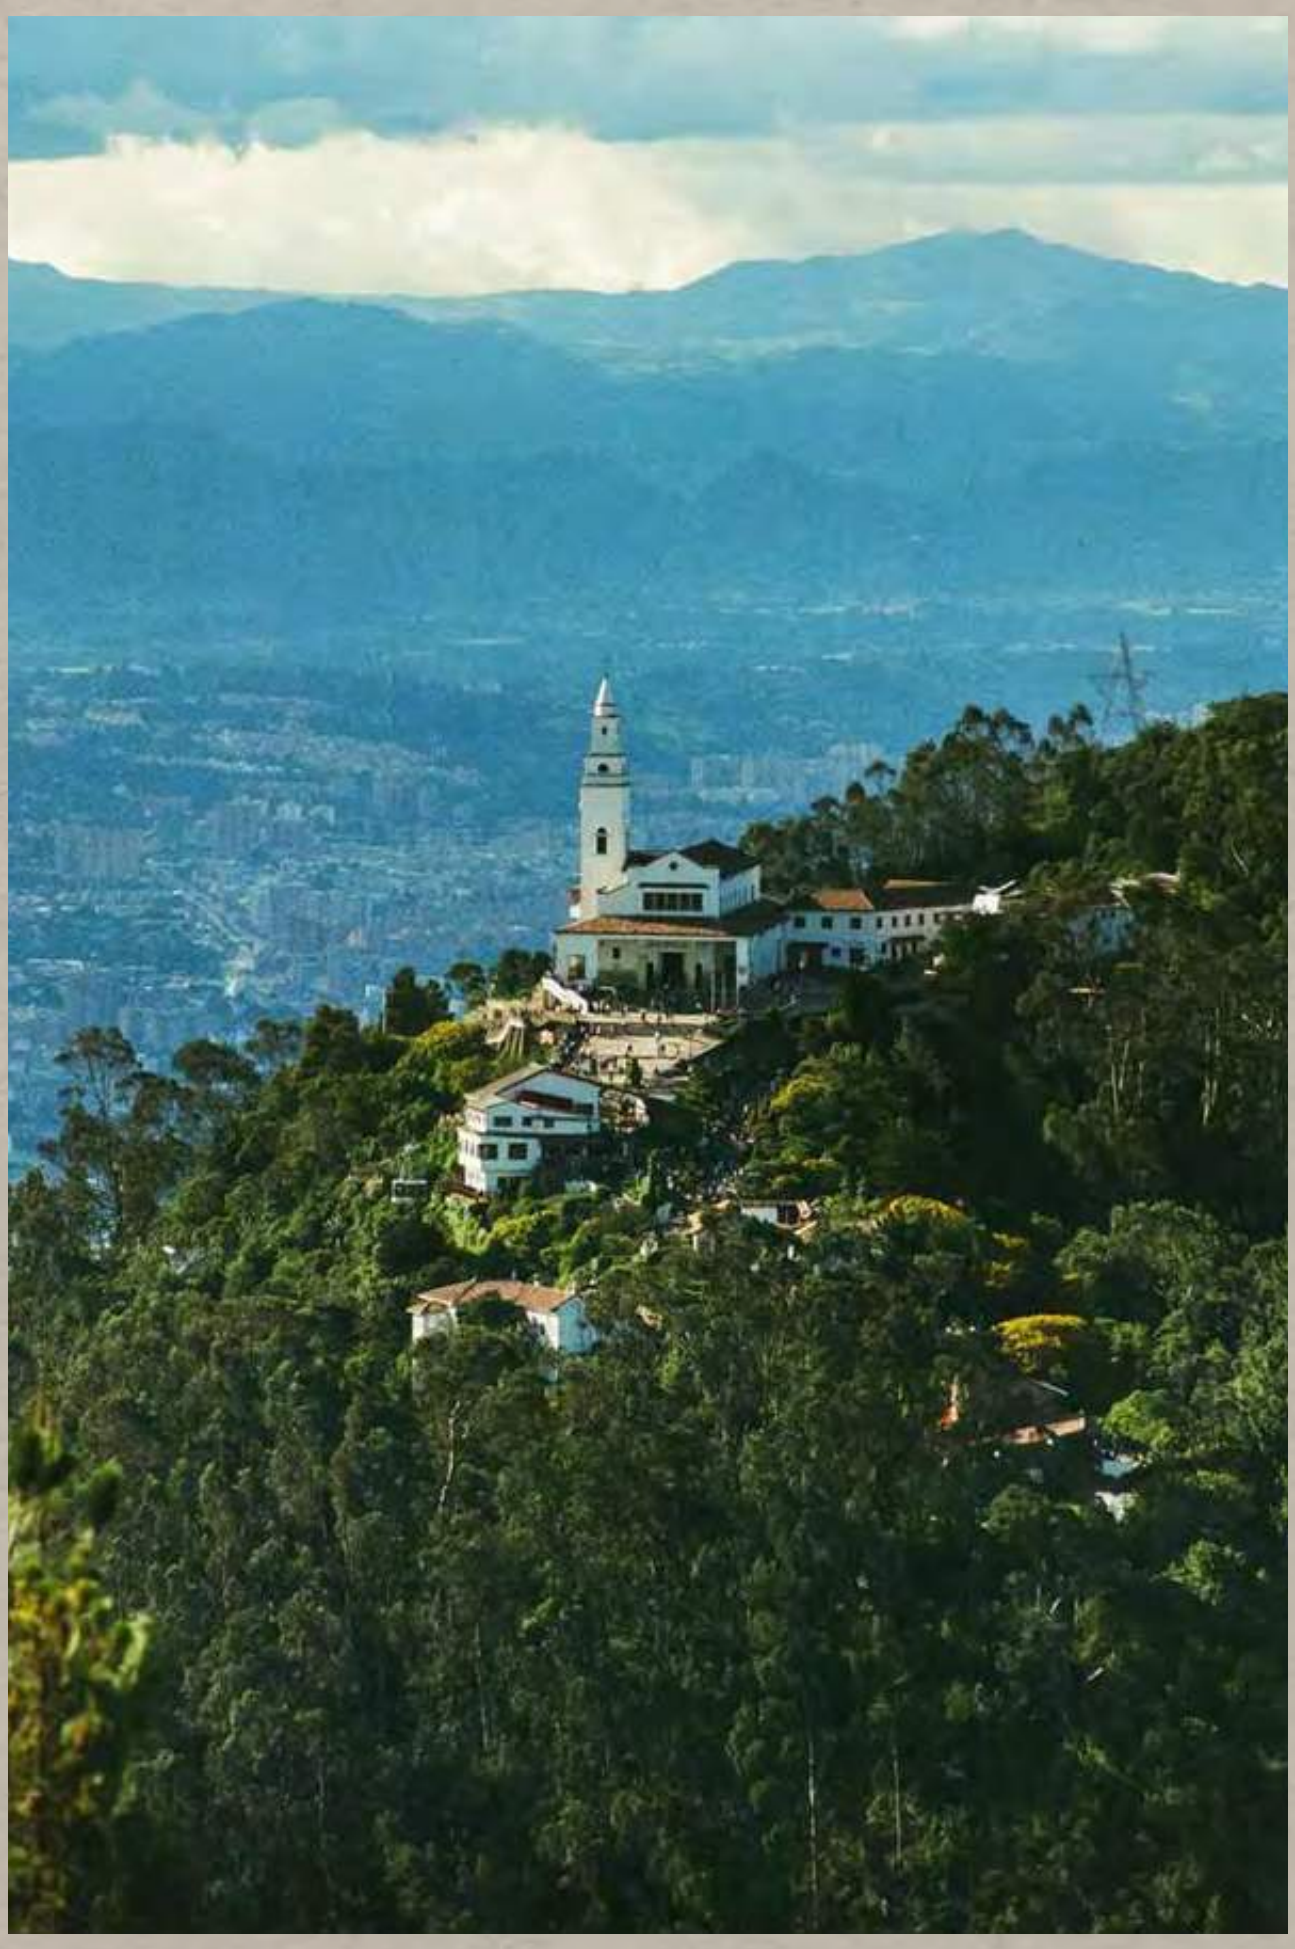

And then there are the details: a good cup of coffee, a long conversation, and a warm “sumercé” from a stranger.

www.seese.co

Carrera 9 #67a-19, Bogotá, Colombia

Seese: to dawn, to illuminate, to announce that light is coming.

The name reflects their belief in bringing ancestral knowledge into contemporary spaces.

Its luminaires are handwoven by a team of Colombian artisan women using natural and industrial fibers, including fique, cotton, terlenka and copper filaments. Each piece is woven thread by thread over structures developed specifically for its design, allowing the material and weave to shape the light. Their expertise in fibres and techniques informs the development of new forms, materials and scales.

SEESE creates collection pieces, large-format installations and custom luminaires for hotels, restaurants, residential spaces and retail. Dimensions, materials, weaving techniques and tones can be adapted to each project. Whether created as a statement piece or developed for a specific space, each SEESE light brings Colombian craftsmanship into contemporary design, giving traditional techniques a new scale and expression.

Its nine rooms have distinct rhythms: mountain views, hammocks or birds visiting the balcony.

Its name comes from a former pasture its founders began restoring in 2016. Today, that first plantación is a private native forest reserve, and the origin of the hotel.

Bahareque walls regulate temperature naturally; rainwater supplies toilets; solar energy heats showers; kitchen waste becomes compost; and garden produce returns to the table. Reusable bottles, fabric bags and biodegradable Colombian amenities carry that thinking into each stay.

Hotel Plantación does not pretend to have solved sustainability. Its 80/20 philosophy balances aspiration with possibility, treating the hotel as a living experiment that listens, learns and evolves. Its message is simple: true luxury should never come at the planet's expense.

Part of Autograph Collection, the hotel has its own identity: rooted in nature, shaped by local culture and designed with a conscious approach to the environment it inhabits.

Every room opens toward the lake, but the way you experience it depends on how you want to travel.

ISLA CLARA

@islaclara_hotel
+57 3113311438
Río Claro, Antioquia

The experience begins before check-in, as you cross the bridge that first connected this once-forgotten piece of land with the world beyond.

Built by Eugenio Giraldo and his family from a dream that began in 2021, Isla Clara was created not to tame its surroundings, but to live gently within them. Natural stone, reclaimed wood and pieces made by local hands give the spaces texture and soul. Fallen timber was rescued, artisans wove decorative details, and stones were chosen for their individual character.

The rooms continue this language through natural materials, private terraces or balconies and outdoor bathtubs surrounded by vegetation.

For the most spacious stay, the 70-square-meter Grand Suite pairs a king bed with a bathtub and a generous balcony overlooking the island.

Days here unfold as a journey through the senses. A long lunch at Ceiba de Agua introduces the territory through regional ingredients, tropical fruits and generous, colorful cooking. As afternoon settles over the island, signature cocktails made with local fruits carry the experience towards evening.

On another night, book Cena Macana, when dinner moves to the hotel's riverfront deck and the flowing water, forest breeze and surrounding darkness become part of the table.

At Spa Savia, aromatic herbs, reflexology, massage and a restorative bath form a ritual designed to release the tensions the body carries quietly.

Elsewhere, Oasis offers a sunlit place to pause, while Solea appears among the trees like a deep-blue mirror.

This place is calm, but never still. Peacocks wander freely through the hotel, monkeys move between the trees and native birds fill the canopy with sound. The luxury is not escaping life, but feeling completely surrounded by it.

THE HOTEL: A nature retreat on an island in Río Claro.

FOR: Travelers who want to experience Río Claro from within its landscape, combining adventure and immersion in nature with privacy and comfort.

What to do

Swim or float from the hotel's private access to Río Claro.

Born from a family’s childhood memories beside the river, this six-cabin eco-luxury retreat invites guests into a world of open-air living, shared food and days measured by water, birds and changing light.

Its name comes from the forest’s deepest corners, where sunlight reaches the ground in fragments. The architecture follows that humility: no trees were cut unnecessarily, and Indigenous artisans worked with local hands to create structures that adapt to the mountain. Some cabins open almost entirely to the forest, with outdoor showers, jacuzzis and river-facing terraces.

TASTE WITH A DRIZZLE OF HONEY.

A fruit from the Amazon and Pacific regions, several communities in Colombia’s Pacific region.

THE CARIBBEAN region

The Caribbean stretches between sea and mountain, desert and jungle, with ciénagas, mangroves, islands and rivers shaping its landscapes and communities. Life here carries the mark of many cultures, from Indigenous traditions and Afro-Caribbean heritage to the flavors, rhythms and celebrations that have taken root along the coast.

Its spirit lives in the everyday: fresh fruit on a hot afternoon, music in the streets, and conversations that stretch well beyond sunset.

Aimarawa feels like the Caribbean resort you wish someone had told you about sooner. Its name evokes “land of the sea, chosen to receive a blessing” a fitting idea for an oasis of palm thatched roofs, interiors and tropical gardens opening onto the Gulf of Morrosquillo.

Its 20 rooms are arranged across five types rather than a hotel block. Amarú, a two storey cabin for eight, gives families and friends space to stay together; Wualá lofts and Ameyal suites pair interiors with private jacuzzis; while the adults only Tree House bungalows and beachfront Wandra rooms turn the resort into a romantic escape for two. Room service and a pillow menu add comfort. With such an intimate capacity, the resort rarely feels crowded and attentive service allows parents to relax while children are cared for.

At Guadua, developed with Grupo Carmen, ingredients from the Caribbean and Montes de María meet techniques and presentation.

Ara Macao, the beach bar inspired by the resort's two scarlet macaws, Blue and Red, brings color to the water's edge through signature cocktails, tropical flavors and an easy rhythm that carries into the evening.

THE SPA OFFERS A JOURNEY: a hydrotherapy circuit and rituals inspired by the four elements, designed to reconnect body and mind. A swimming pool, gym, playground and spaces for weddings and private celebrations complete a resort created for sharing.

THE HOTEL: Luxury Caribbean resort

FOR: Families who want everything beautifully taken care of, couples seeking privacy and friends ready to experience the Caribbean together.

What to experience

Paddleboard, kayak or wakeboard from the resort, or spend the afternoon between the beach and pool.

Set out by private boat for Tintipán, Múcura, Isla Palma, Sanguaré and Santa Cruz Islet.

Follow the Sinú River to Boca de Tinajones, where freshwater meets the Caribbean, stopping for a meal at Doña Sara's riverside cabin.

Let younger guests enjoy the playground, children’s menu and organized pool activities while adults visit the spa or gym.

Move through the hydrotherapy circuit before choosing a treatment inspired by earth, water, air or fire.

Dine at Guadua, then watch the evening arrive with a signature cocktail at Ara Macao.

What if the most important object you'll ever own doesn't exist yet?

A childhood memory might become a ceramic lamp for your bedside table, a reminder of the light within. A family identity might become a dining table with symbols carved into its surface and filled with mother-of-pearl mosaic, keeping shared values at the center of the table, and the conversation.

A love story may become an embroidered bridal textile, revisited over the years and passed on as an heirloom. La Gaviota works from the inside out. A memory, feeling or sense of place can become color, texture, image and form. She follows that instinct until something intangible becomes something you can see, touch and live with.

Each piece is personal in origin, distinctly La Gaviota in its visual language, and brought to life through Colombian craftsmanship, made to gather meaning over time.

Because some stories are meant not only to be remembered, but to take form. What's yours?

Set within a reserve of tropical dry forest and facing the reefs of the Rosario Islands, Hotel Las Islas is a world of treetops, mangroves and Caribbean waters where nature remains the architecture's most important element.

Its 65 bungalows are named after Colombian islands, each carrying its island's name and a map locating it. This approach earned the hotel a feature in National Geographic Traveller UK among the Caribbean's distinctive nature retreats.

The bungalows follow the natural terrain, with conical roofs and private spaces that feel hidden within the forest. Some rise among the canopy with private jacuzzis; others sit at sea level with saltwater pools. Five minutes away by boat, Isleta offers ten pool bungalows, a restaurant, bar, saltwater pool and private beach, making it an easy escape for long lunches or private celebrations.

Back on the main property, more than 300 meters of beach lead to Spa Niña Daniela. A forest path opens onto massage cabins, a yoga terrace, meditation room, sauna, Turkish bath and seawater thalassotherapy pool.

Dining unfolds across four restaurants and bars: breakfast with sea views at Tía Coco, casual beachfront meals at Choco, dinner at Las Guacas and drinks with a 360-degree view from Las Islas Bar.

Part of Beyond Green, the hotel supports responsible tourism through three desalination plants, zero single-use plastics and a team that is 80% local Barú talent.

At the hotel, the landscape is never a backdrop. Forest, sea and sand shape the experience at every turn, creating a stay that feels deeply connected to Barú and its natural surroundings.

A DAY in BARRANQUILLA

START AT THE MAGDALENA RIVER.

Barranquilla sits where the Magdalena River, Colombia's most important river and a historic route for trade, reaches the Caribbean.

Begin at the Gran Malecón del Río, the five-kilometer promenade built directly along its banks, with restaurants, parks, sports areas, sculptures and places to sit by the water.

Take a ride on the Luna del Río, a 65-meter Ferris wheel with 44 enclosed cabins and 360° views of the river and city, or hop on the Carrusel del Río, a traditional carousel right beside it.

Make time to eat.

Start with a cayeye, a creamy mash of green banana and costeño cheese, or try some fritos: carimañolas, empanadas and other fried bites sold throughout the city.

Then there is the chuzo desgranado, a Barranquilla classic made with grilled meat or chicken, sausage, corn, cheese, lettuce, crispy potatoes, bollo and sauces.

The city's food also reflects its large Arab community, with Lebanese and Palestinian recipes found throughout Barranquilla.

Three places to try:

Cucayo for Caribbean cooking and dishes from the costeño table.

El Árabe Internacional for traditional Middle Eastern food.

Narcobollo for casual local staples, especially fritos and carimañolas.

Then head to Barrio Abajo.

This is where Carnival becomes part of everyday life.

Walk through the streets where cumbia, drums, costumes and dance are practiced year-round, visit the Museo del Carnaval, and look for the murals and houses connected to the hacedores del Carnaval.

The neighborhood is recognized for its cultural connection to the celebration and is considered one of its traditional homes.

Come during Carnival.

The Carnival of Barranquilla is considered the second largest in Latin America, and consistently ranks among the world’s most important carnivals.

In 2027, Carnival runs from February 6–9, with the official season beginning on January 16.

This is when the city fills with comparsas, dances, costumes, music and street celebrations.

End at the coast.

North of the city, the Ciénaga de Mallorquín opens into mangroves and wetlands where resident and migratory birds gather.

Continue to Puerto Mocho, where the beach meets the Magdalena at one of the last points before the river reaches the Caribbean.

By the end of the day, you have followed Barranquilla from the river to the sea, with Carnival, food and the city’s people along the way.

With 99 rooms, four dining concepts, a rooftop pool and spa, it draws inspiration from the territory and local culture to shape an identity that feels distinctly its own. MAKING THE INVISIBLE VISIBLE IS AT THE HEART OF THEIR PHILOSOPHY. Created by two sisters and their lifelong friend, its name plays on “nativo”: arriving somewhere, connecting with it and letting it become part of you.

From the coconut and spearmint lemonade served upon arrival to the facade inspired by the movement of a traditional Raizal dress, the island is present throughout. Contemporary interiors incorporate details created by local artisans, while the elevators shift through seven shades of blue, a nod to the seven colors of the sea surrounding San Andrés. A signature fragrance completes the experience.

The sixth-floor Master Suite is the hotel’s standout stay, with panoramic views of the island, a separate bedroom and living-dining area, and exclusive furnishings and objects created for the hotel.

Nattivo's culinary offering gives each setting its own mood. Wata (water in Creole) rises above the hotel with a rooftop pool, terrace and Island-inspired fusion cuisine.

Casa Bonita moves from Italian breakfast and brunch into aperitivo and dinner, while Bésame Morenita brings Mexican tacos and Muo brings the richness of Caribbean cuisine to the table. At Siel Spa, treatments, solariums and jacuzzis create space to pause and reconnect.

That connection extends to the community behind the hotel: 98% of the team is from San Andrés, with professional opportunities in hospitality complemented by training with Colombian specialists. A water treatment and reuse system also supports the responsible use of the island’s resources.

It is not an island for everyone,and perhaps that is why it becomes unforgettable to those who find their way here. Providencia cannot be fully explained through photographs, travel guides or advertising. None could capture even a fraction of what it feels like to arrive: the openness of its people, the energy of the land or the almost improbable way magical things seem to happen without ever being planned.

Here, a smile becomes the common language. Islanders and travelers gather beside the beach and somehow end up singing as though they had always known one another. Conversations turn into friendships, invitations appear without being planned and afternoons lose track of time.

Its philosophy, “being a tourist without being a tourist,” invites guests to experience the island from within, with the warmth of a home and the care of an exceptional boutique hotel.

Facing Crab Key, the property preserves the spirit of an authentic island house. Wooden structures, open terraces, turquoise accents, antique lanterns and mosaics of mermaids and barracudas bring Providencia indoors without turning it into a theme.

Suites can be booked individually or the entire house reserved for up to twelve guests, with a private chef, concierge, saltwater infinity pool and direct access to the sea.

Food is another way of discovering the island.

A private chef prepares each day’s meals with fresh fish, produce from local farmers and ingredients deeply rooted in Providencia, including coconut, breadfruit, cassava, plantain and tropical fruits.

Served overlooking the Caribbean, the experience feels less like dining at a hotel and more like being welcomed into an island home.

The name carries another island story with Simón González Restrepo. A poet, thinker and legendary character known as El Brujo Simón. He believed the wind brought knowledge from distant places. Living on one of Providencia's breeziest points, he called it Monasterio del Viento: the Monastery of the Wind.

Owner Eric Newman's relationship with Providencia extends far beyond the hotel. For more than two decades, his family has reinvested Monasterio's profits into the island and its Raizal community.

After Hurricane Iota, they housed Colombia's reconstruction team free of charge for three years, retained their entire staff and supported emergency shelter, clean water and education initiatives. Monasterio was rebuilt last, reopening in 2024 as proof that tourism can give back to the place it calls home.

Set within Old Providence McBean Lagoon National Natural Park, the house is a true “dive-in, dive-out” property, with complimentary kayaks, nearby snorkeling and national park hikes, and diving and scuba certification available from the property. Its relationships with local guides, divers, fishermen and boat captains make it a natural base for discovering Providencia through the people who know it best.

Orocué, Casanare

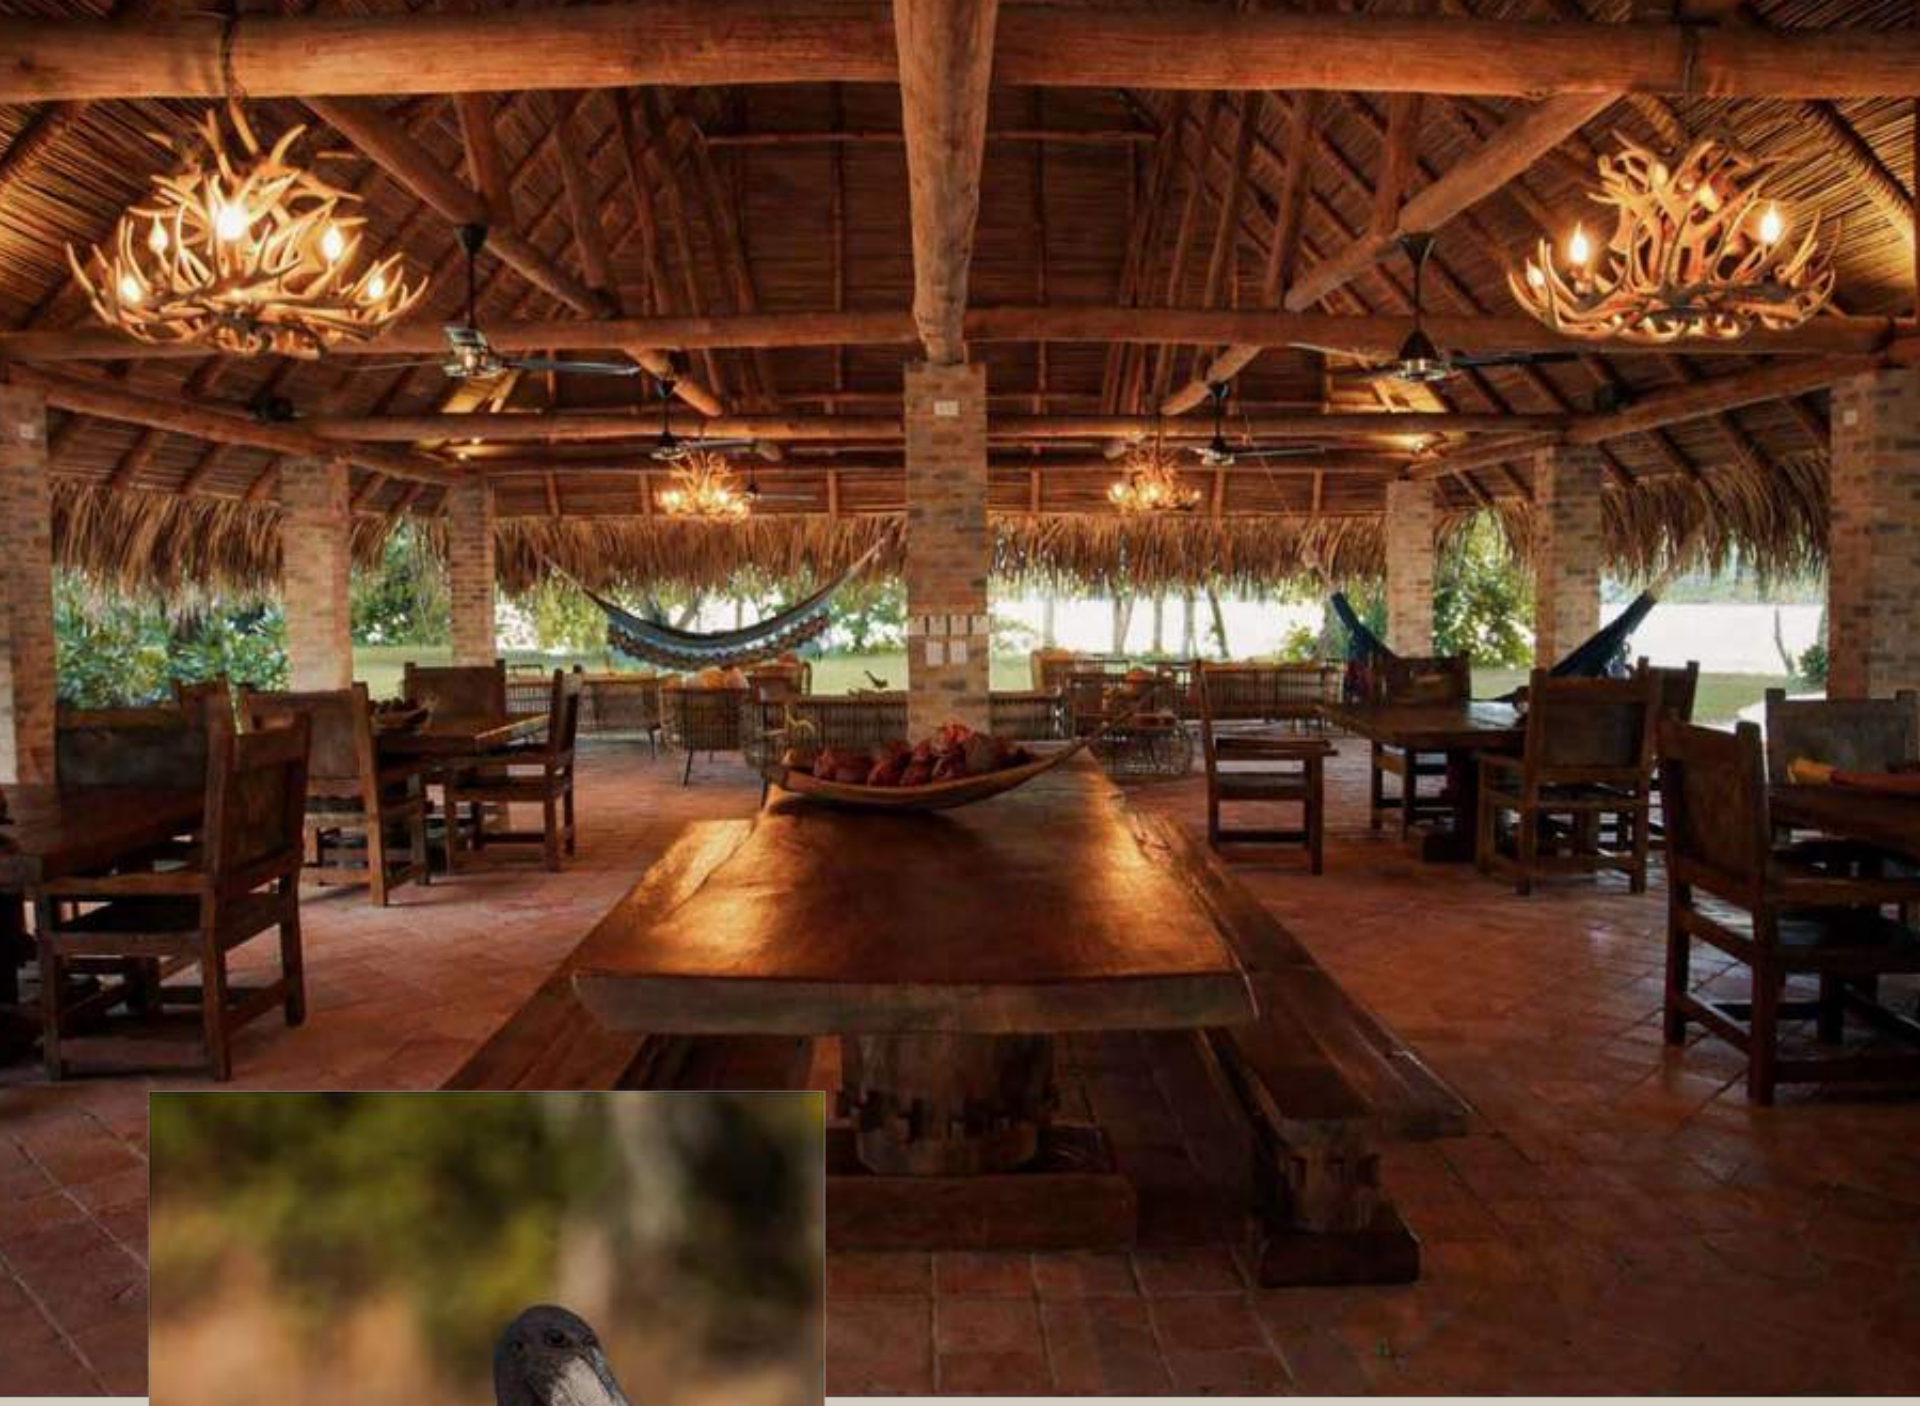

Decades later, that first encounter became Savanna Orinoquía Lodge, a place created as a safari lodge to experience the extraordinary wildlife and open plains of the Llanos. The region's story also lives in literature: this was one of the places that inspired José Eustasio Rivera's La Vorágine, one of Colombia's most important novels.

The lodge offers six private bungalows with a pool, surrounded by one of Colombia's richest environments for observing wildlife. More than 400 bird species have been recorded here, alongside chigüiros, deer, monkeys, caimans, anteaters, turtles and countless other species.

For travelers who come to Colombia in search of animals, this is a place to look closer. The vast plains offer extraordinary opportunities to observe them in their natural surroundings. During the dry months, the savanna opens up and white-sand beaches appear along the Cravo Sur River; when the rains arrive, waterways spread across the grasslands and everything turns intensely green.

At Garzón Soldado, the restaurant, Casanare comes to the table through cassava, plantain, pumpkin and aromatic cilantrón de sabana.

Named after one of the region's most imposing birds, it reflects the connection to the Llanos throughout the dining experience. As for the stay itself, Llanero guides bring generations of knowledge of the plains, some even speaking several languages.

The lodge also supports the local school with educational and technological resources and contributes to the conservation of charapa and terecay turtles.

Come to ride across open plains, follow the waterways, listen to Llanero music by the fire and experience a side of Colombia shaped by space, nature and tradition.

For Indigenous communities such as the Sikuani, the palm has long been a source of food, fibers, shelter and materials for craftsmanship. Its leaves and fibers become baskets, hammocks, bags and other handmade objects.

COLOMBIA: #2 IN FLOWERING PLANT DIVERSITY

THE AMAZON region

Beyond the plains, the world's largest tropical rainforest begins. Rivers become roads, trees rise into an endless canopy and pink dolphins move through waters that flood the forest itself. Indigenous knowledge has guided life here for thousands of years, preserved through languages, rituals and malocas. Immense, mysterious and almost impossible to comprehend, this is not simply another region of Colombia. THIS IS THE AMAZON.

Rio Amazonas- Km 60, Leticia, Amazonas

At fourteen, Diego Samper traveled for the first time to the Orinoco River, carrying with him the sense of adventure he had discovered in the pages of Jules Verne.

That early fascination grew into a life spent exploring, photographing and understanding the Amazonian basin. More than fifty years later, alongside his wife Marlene Escobar, that journey found its most personal expression in Calanoa: a place shaped by their memories, discoveries and deep relationship with the forest.

Set within 50 hectares of protected rainforest, Calanoa is the culmination of their life's work. Its eight cabins, designed by Diego, rise among trees, lagoons, wetlands and ravines, creating a place where architecture gives way to the sounds, movement and changing light of the jungle. Diego and Marlene's own artistic practices: photography, ceramics, weaving and sculpture, are part of this world, as is the presence of Indigenous and local communities who have helped shape the project.

Diego describes it simply: "Calanoa is a place of encounters, with the Wild, with others, with yourself."

At Calanoa, travelers are invited into a way of seeing the Amazon shaped by observation and exchange.
The forest is approached through curiosity rather than spectacle, and the people who know it become part of the story: local guides, Indigenous elders, artists and craftspeople who share traditions passed down through generations. There is space to ask questions, learn unfamiliar ways of understanding the territory and encounter the Amazon beyond what can be seen at first glance.

Calanoa also protects the landscape beyond the lodge. Through Fundación Calanoa, the project supports reforestation, environmental research, traditional agriculture, education, community initiatives, crafts and ancestral practices across five surrounding communities.

The reserve itself is part of this commitment, preserving a living ecosystem where nature and culture remain inseparable.

There is a certain magic to Calanoa, but it is not manufactured. It comes from Diego and Marlene's way of looking at the Amazon and from their decision to share what they have discovered through their most sacred work: this place. As Diego says, "The forest is never silent. It is singing and humming and beating."

A FLOWER

TO ADMIRE

ACACALLIS CYANEA

Orchidaceae · Acacallis cyanea / Aganisia cyanea

Hidden within the Amazon, the Acacallis cyanea stands out for its extraordinary shades of blue, violet, white and yellow. Its most unusual quality, however, is its habitat. This orchid grows in the warm, humid environments of the Amazon basin, often close to flooded areas and waterways.

THE PACIFIC region

There the humid tropical jungle reaches the Pacific Ocean and water governs. This is one of the wettest and most biodiverse regions on Earth. Rain feeds its rivers, darkens its beaches and wraps the trees in mist. By day, the immensity appears calm. At night, the jungle roars: thunder travels across the ocean while frogs, insects and exotic creatures hidden in the darkness create a sound that seems to rise from the earth itself.

START

Yet Chocó is more than wilderness. Afro-Colombian and Indigenous communities have learned to live in conversation with this force of nature. Dance brings entire towns together; fish, coconut, native herbs and viche carry generations of knowledge to the table. Nothing here remains silent or still. The jungle breathes, the Pacific moves and its people answer with music.

WHAT TO DO

Watch humpback whales, release sea turtles and spot endemic birds.

Canoe through mangroves, hike to waterfalls and hidden thermal springs.

Surf Pacific waves, snorkel, dive reefs and witness bioluminescence.

Fish with local guides and taste seafood, coconut, native herbs and viche.
