1 year
complete

The Youth Justice workstream, which is dedicated to increasing NUM's engagement with and support of 18 - 25 year old sex workers, has just completed it's first year!

WE ASKED a cohort of young adults in the sex working industry about their life experiences and how services are best placed to support them...

YOU ANSWERED that more community is needed for young workers, vocational advice without stigma can provide tangible next steps, and amplifying your voice is at the heart of true change.

WE PROMISE to develop wraparound support, advocacy programmes and platforms to speak back, keeping young sex workers at the forefront of every conversation and listening to their voices every step of the way!

youth justice speaks on housing

96.6% of respondents reported that they are responsible for their own housing costs.

The largest proportion of respondents are privately renting their accommodation, with less than 30% making up the remainder, including:

- ➔ owned with mortgage
- ➔ social housing
- ➔ homeless/sofa surfing

in the YJ study, of those involved in unpaid pursuits, over 40% of respondents are in education

UNIVERSITIES...IT'S TIME FOR A WAKE UP CALL

Housing affects us all; we have seen recent legislation giving renters more rights and new housing estates popping up everywhere.

However, university students are often forgotten in these conversations, with many having to choose between paying rent or buying food. This is exacerbated when student sex workers are brought into the conversation, with morality clauses forcing them to hide their work and risk their accommodation with no realistic alternatives.

We call on universities to rethink their policies on sex work whilst someone in a student and how they work in practice.

Upcoming models and dates:

19th October - Cocoa Kink

Cocoa Kink is a fan favourite! Known for her charisma, she makes every artist feel like Degas with her charm, smile and cheeky surprises.

Renowned up and down the country for her burlesque, Cocoa's performances are not just about the art of seduction; they challenge norms and invite audiences to explore the liberating power of desire.

2nd November - Matt Skully

Matt Skully is a London-based kink practitioner and multidisciplinary artist whose practice spans live performance, events, writing and photography. His work explores both historical and modern sexuality with a primary focus on gay hedonism. Matt has organised and run global fetish events for 15 years, including Fetish Week London, Ziber, and Folsom Street Fair. His curation work brings together performers, artists and activists and has previously worked with Torture Garden, Sexual Freedom Awards, HOWL, Bishopgate Institute, The Barbican and Museum of London.

16th November - Nyavka

Nyavka is a queer, London-based skrippa. Aside from being your professional daydream, she is also a hobbyist contortionist and hopes you enjoy sketching out some flexy poses. This class is her debut with the ELSC!

7th December - Effy Storm

aka Flexi Effy. She's been a skripper, wrestler, acrobat and hand balancer! On top of this, she is pregnant! By the time of modelling in December, she'll be close to her due date, but she wants you to know that she's not done showing off. Don't expect her to be standing there for too long, she insists on bringing her best bendy self! Effy is beyond charming, friendly and gorgeous, this is a real treat!

14th December - Ally Only

Awarded Strlpper of the Year in 2024, Ally Only has been entertaining audiences across the country since 2020. They are a founding member of CYBERTEASE, a sex worker cooperative that produce socialist striptease events and pop-up strl pclubs. Ally also works closely with other sex worker organisations including the East London Strippers Collective!

If you have a friend, partner, or family member who is a full service sex worker (e.g. an escort) and you are willing to advocate for them by speaking to your local MP about sex workers' rights, please fill out this form. We need you to help us win decrim and fight off the Nordic model, so that we can protect sex workers' safety and rights.

People who do other kinds of sex work (such as stripping or online work) are also very important to us, but this campaign is focused on full service sex workers because they currently experience the most criminalisation, and because of the government's plan to do a review of "laws on prostitution" soon. We will get in contact with you soon with some suggestions about how to try and get a meeting with your MP, as well as sharing a briefing you can take with you to help guide the conversation and an FAQs document.

Decrim Now is the UK's national campaign for sex work decriminalisation, led by sex workers and allies. Our members include representatives of all of the main sex workers' rights organisations in the UK, including the English Collective of Prostitutes, SWARM, the Sex Workers' Union, and National Ugly Mugs.

We won't share your personal data with anyone outside Decrim Now, except where you have given us permission to do so (e.g. if you'd like us to help you contact your MP). You can read Decrim Now's privacy policy here. If you change your mind about being involved, you can ask us at any time to delete your data.

If you have any questions about this campaign or our work, you can email us at contact@decrimnow.org.uk.

“My number one piece of advice would be community”

- advice on renting, by Mia Tofana

“There's always somebody worse off than yourself”

That's what my grandmother used to say, and this afternoon as I was speaking to a fellow sex worker who's just moved up north and is now entwined in a nightmarish landlord situation including raw sewage leaks and ongoing intimidation, I certainly felt like I was the lucky one in this scenario.

As someone who has moved house 13 times in the last 20 years due to section 21 evictions, and with incredible loss to income, I was amazed to discover that I wasn't a rare story when I attended a local Acorn meeting. Acorn renters Union represents local communities in fighting landlords and I'm not afraid to say that I felt close to tears during the first meeting I attended. Mostly because everybody knew what I was talking about, but also showed solidarity and acceptance of my job. The UK has completely lost its way when it comes to renting and housing provision in general and I was so happy to see Acorn pushing really hard for renters rights reform and even more jubilant when they won and the act was implemented.

I made more social media videos about the act than being a dominatrix at one point, it was so important to me, and I was very happy to be invited by NUM to be part of a webinar on the topic, which you can find on their website.

Following the videos and several talks on this issue, I've been asked regularly: What would be your advice to people who are sex workers in the renters market at the moment?

My number one piece of advice would be community, whether it's fellow workers or people from outside the industry or ideally a mix of the two, you need to stick together when it comes to renting. The information we are told is often so untrue or outdated, and given there is no registry of landlords we need to find our own way to spread information. And the best way as we sex workers know is by word of mouth.

The second would be learn a little bit of legislation. If everyone does that we can use our chat groups to fight the inevitable poor treatment by landlords and their property agents. Learn what deposit scams are and how to beat them: the TDS is no longer on our side, you need to share information.

This would be my third piece of advice. Don't trust those property agents. Both landlords and their agents are out to do one thing and that's to make money from you. Because you're the only person paying but you'll so often be treated unfairly as the law is completely toothless when it comes to landlords: the rich look after their own. So if you can remember you're the boss in this situation and know your legal rights, utilise your community, information, and the resilience we all have, you can beat them. Absolutely join a union.

The Renters Rights Act is only useful if we use it and grow from it, so I would love every SW I know to watch the webinar, make your own, and learn it. We all know our economic situations are not what they have been and most of us realise that our livelihood is seriously at threat currently with online restrictions and proposed legislation. Under the threat of the Nordic model, we see increased abilities for landlords and their agents to make us homeless, to displace our families and deny our right to make a living. If you are thrown out of your home, it's often very hard to find another one and landlords do what we should do: they talk. They have forums.

IG: mia_tofana
X: miatofana
Tik Tok: miatofana
Website: bdsmmia.com

"They have secret blacklists. They know who we are but that doesn't mean we don't have rights. Learn about what different clauses in your contract mean and learn to be cocky about what power you have if confronted by a landlord. If fighting costs them, they'll rarely do it. Generally the wisest thing is to maintain the oldest SW practice and that is being discreet, nobody needs to know where you work and what goes on in your home. If you feel compromised and need to move, jump before you're pushed where possible.

Again, working in a community can be so beneficial here. Have an emergency person who can move stuff in their van. Have a little collective fund for a deposit and make sure that you make use of each of the spare rooms and couches, because most of us have definitely been there. There's so many hints and tips and long-winded political points I could make in this article, but most of all I'd like to show you that you're not alone in this. Sex workers shouldn't be especially ashamed because of what we do, and right now many people out there are facing their own problems and there's more solidarity. Not everyone is born into the position where they can buy a house, more people realise that now. So don't beat yourself up about where you are. You're literally doing what you can to get by and nobody should be ashamed of that.

I wake up everyday in lucky house number 14, and I'm very thankful that the rent is paid, everything is in place but 10 minutes later I can feel that niggling at the back of my mind that at some point I'll have to move on to house 15. Maybe 16, 17, 18 because I'm never fully secure. Social housing is not something that is offered as much, so if you can create social housing with each other as sex workers always have done, please do so.

We have to remember the history of our industry and who we're made up of. We are not this institution that keeps people homeless for the usefulness of shame and for the sake of maintaining a poverty class, in this way, if we can remember that we are all already home.

50 years of fighting for sex workers' rights

It started with the legendary occupation of the St Nizier church in Lyon, France, by a group of sex workers. In 2025, at the 50th anniversary of the St Nizier occupation, ESWA organised a region-wide campaign, with events, protests, parties and activities in different cities across Europe and Central Asia. In June 2026 the European Sex Workers Alliance (ESWA) launched documentary capturing this special day.

“I know ketchup on haggis is a crime...”

Under the Red Umbrella caught up with the organiser of a new sex worker meet up in Edinburgh

We're so glad to hear about a new sex worker breakfast starting up in Edinburgh, tell us all about it:

So, both me and my co-host were feeling like in Edinburgh there was like a real lack of social infrastructure for sex workers. Like there is obviously existing community networks and existing peer to peer support networks and friendships and of course the community is incredibly tight knit, but there was a lack of like sex worker centred events. I know that I personally was particularly inspired by the memory of a Scot Pep breakfast, which I used to attend before COVID and which were incredible, and this format is very popular across the UK.

How did the idea come about?

I don't think we were particularly original in setting this up, but, sometimes it's not about coming up with a new groundbreaking idea, it's just about like building something in the community.

Is it sex workers only? And how do people get involved?

Yes, it is sex workers only, and specifically we are very clear in our safer spaces policies that, if you are not a current or former sex worker, you should not consider yourself welcome to this event. And we also ask that you examine your relationship with sex work because the way I see it, if you have sold 2 foot pictures in 2015, and that has been the entirety of your involvement with the adult industry as a service provider, then maybe this is not necessarily the space for you. We don't want to be exclusionary, but we also want to protect this space and the people who will turn up because it's very important to us that our attendees feel like it's as safe a space as possible. It's a trustworthy space in which they can feel comfortable and open. Basically, yes, it is sex workers only. We are open to former sex workers because we feel like a lot of the times, your ties to the community can still be quite significant, we just ask that you're like realistic about your level of involvement with the community.

As for how people get involved, people can just find us on Instagram or Fet Life and soon on Grindr, or they can email us and we will let them know the address of our venue, and, yeah, and then they just show up, prepared to have some lovely breakfast, even though it's usually an afternoon event, but, you know, sex workers' schedules and sleep cycles tend to be unusual sometimes.

If someone wants to come on their own but feels a bit awkward, what's your advice to them?

I think it's so normal for people to feel a little bit awkward the first time when you're going somewhere new and especially if you don't think you're gonna know anyone. The best advice I think is bring a buddy. If you have a sex worker friend who is also free that day, showing up with someone who you already know with and whose company you know you enjoy. Yeah, my best advice is come along with a buddy. Or if you don't have any friends in the community, and this is why you're coming along, because you're hoping to make new friends, something that I've done in the past has been make plans with your friends before and after, in the vicinity of the venue. So you could ask a friend to grab coffee with you beforehand, you could ask a different friend to go for a walk with you afterwards, so you know that there's less pressure on this event itself going well and being amazing. Hopefully it will go well, hopefully it will be amazing, but you might be able to approach it in a more relaxed way, if you've just seen a friend or if you're just about to see a friend afterwards, so you've got something else really nice in your day that you can look forward to, to kind of like, Yeah, take a bit of pressure off.

And another thing to remember is that we've all been the odd one out, you know, the person in the corner of the function, the person near the snack table at the party in the kitchen, because we don't know anyone and we don't know who to talk to. Because we have all been in that situation before, we will always try our best to make new faces feel welcome and included. A lot of people come to these things who don't know each other beforehand, you know, this is not like a regular meetup where all the same people show up every time. It's always going to be a blend of people who have known each other very casually, and people who don't know each other at all. There might be a few people who have known each other quite well before, but that's usually a minority; that's why social mixers like these exist, to bring into the same room people who don't know each other. So you are very much not alone in feeling a bit awkward and a bit shy. The other thing to do to remember is that you can always message the hosts, us, beforehand. You can shoot us an email or a message on our social media and be like, hey, I'm thinking of coming, but I'm really bad at new people. I have really bad social anxiety, I'm really autistic, I'm really shy or whatever, and we'll just be like, hey, you OK? Do you wanna meet up beforehand? Do you want me to come outside to meet you outside so we can walk in the room together and you don't have everyone staring at you? Do you want us all to wear a stupid hat, so you feel like, because we're wearing a stupid hat, you feel like less put on the spot? The point of coming to these things is building a community and unfortunately, the price to pay for building a community is that little bit of discomfort and intimidation of walking in a room where you don't know if you're gonna like people, you don't know if you're gonna know people for the first time. But the good news is it gets so much easier from there.

What's your go-to breakfast order?

I am so sorry to everyone in Scotland, but link sausage and haggis on a roll with no butter and a lot of ketchup. I know that ketchup on haggis is a crime, but that is the best combination in my opinion. This is if I'm having breakfast out. If I'm having breakfast in the house, you know, I just like some avocado toast. Actually, let me think. My favourite breakfast right now that I'm currently obsessed with is a slice of thick bread, better if it's multiseed, not brown, lightly toasted, mashed avocado with a little bit of lemon juice, crumbled up goat cheese on top, a couple of olives and and brine without the pit, and a wee drizzle of balsamic glaze. That's been my go to breakfast this summer.

Sexquisite is an award-winning performing arts company platforming sex worker artists, using art as activism and as a tool to drive meaningful change. They use performance to destigmatise sex work and create original work that is political, feminist, and multidisciplinary.

Operating year-round across the UK, Sexquisite produces original shows, cabaret, theatre, podcasts, exhibitions and more that centre sex workers.
