Crispy Duck Salad

Perfect for festive starter options.

This dish takes roasted duck two ways: half shredded and shattered into shards of pure crackling-crisp texture, half glazed low and slow in a sticky soy-hoisin-honey sauce until it's dark and glossy.

Between sits watermelon and mouli for freshness and crunch, pak choi and beansprouts dressed through the same glaze, and a finish of toasted cashews, sesame, coriander and chilli for heat and bite.

It's built to work as a starter that doesn't fill before the main event, or a main course that feels indulgent without the weight of a full roast dinner.

GF 590g Frozen

Every December, someone tries to replace the prawn cocktail. Every December, it outsells whatever replaced it. There is a reason: it's cold, it's fast, it clears the pass in seconds and it's the starter your guests actually want before a heavy main.

The difference is in the prawn. Cold water prawns for sweetness and bite, Arctic Royal for the plate that says occasion, tiger prawn tails when it's going in a glass and needs to look like something. Get the prawn right and the rest is a good sauce, a crisp leaf and a wedge of lemon.

Ham, Tomato & Cheddar Tart

New to our range this season, the Ham, Tomato & Cheddar Tart.

At 150g it plates beautifully as a starter with dressed leaves and a sharp pickle, or served warm with new potatoes as a light lunch. Cut into wedges it works across sharing boards and small plates menus, where the ham hock and semi-dried tomato do enough on their own to carry a plate.

Come December it earns its place in a different way. Cold buffets, function catering and party menus all need something substantial that holds well at room temperature and does not tie up an oven.

Yorkshire Pudding Wrap

From market stall to bistro plate

It started on market stalls in Yorkshire and it has not stopped moving since. A warm Yorkshire pudding, rolled around slow-cooked beef and gravy, eaten standing up in the cold. Simple, familiar, and completely unlike anything else on a December menu.

The version that has crossed into bistro service looks different. Plated open rather than wrapped in paper, with the gravy poured at the table, it reads as a proper festive main while running on components most kitchens already hold. Same idea, better margin.

Scandinavian Mulled Wine

Mulled Wine, or Glogg as it's called in Scandinavia, is the main traditional Winter and Christmas drink across the Nordic countries. For centuries people in Scandinavia have spiced and served their wine warm during the long and cold winters. Recipes vary; however, Scandinavian Mulled Wine has always been based on certain spices, sugar and wine.

This Scandinavian Mulled Wine is produced according to a recipe from the early 1900 and we use a full bodied red wine as base and then spicing it with ginger, cardamom, clove and some secret spices. Available from September every year it's the perfect Mulled Wine for any busy restaurant, pub or bar!

How to make the viral cold foam

Cold foam has quickly become a staple on UK drinks menus, bringing a premium café experience to both hot and iced beverages. Made by whipping milk or cream until light and airy, it adds texture, flavour and visual appeal without the heaviness of whipped cream. Highly customisable with syrups, sauces and seasonal flavours such as vanilla, salted caramel and cinnamon, cold foam is an easy way to create signature drinks and elevate menus across coffees, iced teas, lemonades and soft drinks.
