MAGIQUE

(ma-je-k)

Magique means magical in French.
It's how we like our everyday—unexpected,
a little playful, and always full of character.

The Everyday, Slightly Enchanted

The Wishing Chair began in 2012 in Delhi.
What started as a passion project by two friends is now
a home decor brand that brings charm, colour and joyfulness to homes around the world.

Portrait of a Rose

Before photographs, if you wanted to remember a rose you had to sit down and paint it. Portrait of Rose is painted in that tradition: cabbage roses full-blown, petals falling open in every pink from ballet slipper to raspberry, drawn from the old botanical plates where the flower fills the page. Then the rims are striped in mint and forest green, like a pâtisserie awning or a deckchair on a seaside promenade in 1952. Roses to be looked at closely. Stripes to be seen from across the room.

A timeless tradition

Emerald Ribbon

In a certain kind of Indian house there were two sets of china. There was the everyday one, and there was the other one: green-bordered, thin enough to see the light through, kept in the almirah behind glass. Somebody's grandmother had carried it from a hill-station club or a railway dining car or a shop in Connaught Place. Emerald Ribbon is that set. The narrow green garland, the gold line, the single peony on open white, and the understanding that some china is meant to be brought out.

Indian Summer

In old havelis in Kashmir, there is nearly always a tree—bearing fruit and birds, and symbolising a home filled with plenty. Indian Summer places that tree at the centre of the plate, framed in brick red and ink blue with tiny sprigs like a favourite dupatta. Timeless, season after season.

Indigo Chintz

In the 1600s, hand-painted Indian cotton arrived in London and Paris and caused something close to a panic- chintz. Indigo Chintz brings that cloth back to where it started. Loose, open blooms in blue, lilac and a flush of pink drift across white porcelain, and a dotted band runs round the edge like the border of a block-printer's sheet.

Velvet Willow NEW

Around 1790 an English engraver drew a willow leaning over a bridge, and it went on to become the most printed pattern in the history of tableware. The love story that goes with it, the runaway couple turned into a pair of doves, was invented afterwards, by people selling plates. For two hundred years the willow has meant one thing: the good china, brought out, looked at while somebody talks. Velvet Willow keeps the tree and lets the story go. The slender leaf and the trailing stem travel round the rim as a garden rather than a landscape, in rust, rose and soft green.

Blue Orchard

We believe that tabletop should blend function and art. Every piece is designed with precision, sustainability, and emotion crafted to create homes that tell stories of beauty and balance.

soft embossed textures

A Jaipur blue, made to last.

Blue Orchard NEW

We were enchanted by the blue of Jaipur pottery, a craft that came to the city from Persia by way of Kashmir and Delhi, and that Maharaja Sawai Ram Singh II brought into the palace workshops in the 1860s. Jaipur blue pottery is a strange and lovely thing: it contains no clay at all, only ground quartz, glass and gum, fired once and low, which is why it is so fragile and why so little of the old work survives. Its painters covered every surface with flowers, birds and leaves in one colour, cobalt on white, with a border to hold it all in. Blue Orchard takes that Jaipur hand, its wandering blossoms and its firm rim of stripes, and gives it what the old pottery never had: fine porcelain fired hard enough to last a lifetime of dinners.

Tulip Garden

Folk painting, slowed down to sage and blue.

Tulip Garden NEW

In the village of Zalipie, in southern Poland, the women once painted flowers over the soot marks left by their stoves. Then they painted the ceilings. Then the wells, the dog kennel, the church. Tulips mostly, in whatever colour was left in the pot. Tulip Garden borrows that habit of decorating simply because a surface was there, and settles it into sage green and dusty blue, the colours of a linen cupboard. The motifs are mirrored and stacked the way they would be on a dowry chest or an embroidered cushion cover, and the rim is drawn in a single unhurried line.

Folk flowers, freshen
a table
