EDITOR'S MESSAGE

Welcome to the fall issue

We hope you enjoy all of the interesting articles in this issue.

We have been very fortunate to have a wide range of topics from a variety of great sources.

In this issue, readers will learn what happened at the 16th annual Cool Climate Chardonnay Celebration that occurred in mid-July.

Also, earlier this year, Okanagan College and Niagara College signed a memorandum of understanding to bring Niagara's respected Winery and Viticulture curriculum to the Okanagan — a move that will reshape how the next generation of winemakers, vineyard managers, and cellar technicians train for careers in the industry.

Another article you may enjoy is about the UBC Wine Research Centre, which has morphed over the past 25 years to suit the needs of the industry and faculty priorities. Its mission has always been to have a strong industry focus.

And for our readers who are interested in Vintner Quality Alliance wines, we had the opportunity to talk with the family who owns Painted Rock Winery in Penticton about the VQA wines they produce.

We are also showcasing a substantial list of wineries from across the country.

We thank you for reading Crush magazine. Cheers!

CCOVI shares industry expertise at Cool Climate chardonnay celebration

By Gillian Minaker, Brock University

Expertise from Brock University's Cool Climate Oenology and Viticulture Institute (CCOVI) took flight, bringing wine education to the community and inspiring wine enthusiasts to explore the style and elegance of one of Ontario's key grape varieties: Chardonnay.

Held from July 16-19, the 16th annual International Cool Climate Chardonnay Celebration (i4C) gathered cool climate wine producers from Ontario and around the world to share their passion for the unique grape variety.

A long-standing i4C supporter and collaborator, CCOVI presented "What Kind of Cool Are You" (WKOCAY) during Friday Night Flights at Niagara District Airport in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

For CCOVI's Manager of Professional Studies and Outreach Barb Tatarnic, the interactive educational experience is all about guiding guests on a journey of self-discovery.

"Friday Night Flights gives us the opportunity to connect with guests of the i4C who are new to Chardonnay as well as enthusiasts who are diving deeper into their understanding of the unique varietal," she says.

At the WKOCAY table, event attendees taste four Chardonnays guided by CCOVI experts. Each Chardonnay falls under one of four styles: crisp, fruity, smooth and rich.

A large group of wine enthusiasts sit in a conference room at tables set with wine glasses listening to presenter Chris Waters speak about sparkling wine.

"When guests decide which style they prefer — or what kind of 'cool' they are — we present them with a card that lists all the Chardonnays being poured at the event that fall under their preferred category. Essentially, we give guests a personalized roadmap to help them discover their favourite 'style' of Chardonnay from the more than 100 different Chardonnays being poured from around the world at the event," she says.

Year after year, guests return to CCOVI's table during the Friday evening event to continue their wine discovery journey, with many having visited wineries they learned about at i4C.

"We have hosted the WKOCAY event for the i4C for more than a decade, which speaks volumes to the enduring quality and value we deliver to the community. We have many people return to our table to do this tasting experience every single year, often bringing their friends so they too can discover their style preference," says Tatarnic.

As Chardonnay is such a versatile grape variety capable of producing distinct styles of wines, the initiative presents an opportunity to bring wine education to the community in a fun and engaging way.

"CCOVI has been an important partner of i4C for many years, and together we've always shared a commitment to helping people better understand cool climate Chardonnay. Friday Night Flights is the perfect setting for WKOCAY because it gives guests the opportunity to taste through different styles, learn something new and discover just how diverse and exciting Ontario Chardonnay has become. It's exactly the kind of experience i4C was created to inspire," says Trisha Molokach, i4C Event Director.

Also part of the i4C Education Committee, CCOVI participates annually in the School of Cool, a cornerstone of the i4C weekend that that offers participants from industry and media the opportunity to learn from wine producers and professionals.

Taylor MaGee, CCOVI Operations Coordinator, says it was motivating to see how the Institute's contributions to Canada's grape and wine industry were woven into various elements of this year's educational programming.

"From the presence of many impressive CCOVI graduates who are now influential winemakers to advancing knowledge in sparkling wine production through CCOVI's Fizz Club, the School of Cool reinforced the strong partnerships between Brock and the wider industry," he says.

Looking ahead, both Tatarnic and MaGee are energized by the momentum of i4C initiatives to continue sharing the stories of cool climate wine regions — like Ontario — with the world.

"We are thrilled to continue our partnership with the i4C and help bring more awareness in the community as to how our Canadian industry moves the needle in innovative cool climate grape growing and winemaking," Tatarnic says. ▲

There's nothing quite like a sunny day in Summerland. Winding along country roads, vineyard views stretching across the hillsides, and the promise of a new tasting room, patio, or hidden gem waiting around the next corner.

Now, finding those destinations just got a whole lot easier.

Bottleneck Drive, a scenic self-guided collection of 18 wineries, cideries, distilleries, and breweries located in Summerland, B.C.'s Okanagan Valley, has unveiled a brand-new wayfinding system designed to help visitors explore Summerland's experiences with confidence. The updated signage network brings a fresh look and clearer direction to one of the Okanagan Valley's favourite beverage touring routes.

Developed in partnership with the Economic Trust of the Southern Interior (ETSI-BC) and the District of Summerland, the project replaces a collection of aging and inconsistent signs with a coordinated system built for today's visitors.

"Visitors want to relax and explore, not second-guess directions," says Cameron Walker, who led the project for the Bottleneck Drive Association.

"This project is about making sure people feel confident moving from one experience to the next so they can focus on enjoying everything Summerland has to offer."

For nearly two decades, Bottleneck Drive has helped guide visitors through Summerland's agricultural landscape, connecting them with local producers and unforgettable experiences. But as the route grew and more businesses joined the program, the signage system became a patchwork of different styles, sizes, and placements.

The solution was a complete refresh. Beginning in August 2024, Bottleneck Drive launched a review and redesign process to create a system that was easier to see, easier to read, and more reflective of Summerland's character. Working with graphic designer Phred Martin, the organization reviewed existing signs and developed a new design that blends functionality with the relaxed, rural feel visitors have come to love.

"The design needed to work at driving speed, in changing light, and across varied terrain," says designer Phred Martin. "Clarity always came first, with branding that feels appropriate to Summerland's landscape and pace."

The result is signage that helps visitors confidently navigate the region while still feeling connected to the scenery around them. Whether someone is searching for a favourite winery, discovering a new cidery, or making an afternoon of exploring local producers, the new system makes the journey part of the experience.

"Wayfinding is a key part of how people experience a place," says Sally Pierce with Destination Summerland.

"This updated system supports tourism, improves navigation, and helps visitors move through the community more comfortably while maintaining the character of our rural environment."

The project also included a refreshed Bottleneck Drive logo, updating the organization's visual identity for the first time in more than 20 years while maintaining familiarity for returning guests.

Produced by Wayside in Kelowna, the signage project was made possible with significant funding support from ETSI-BC.

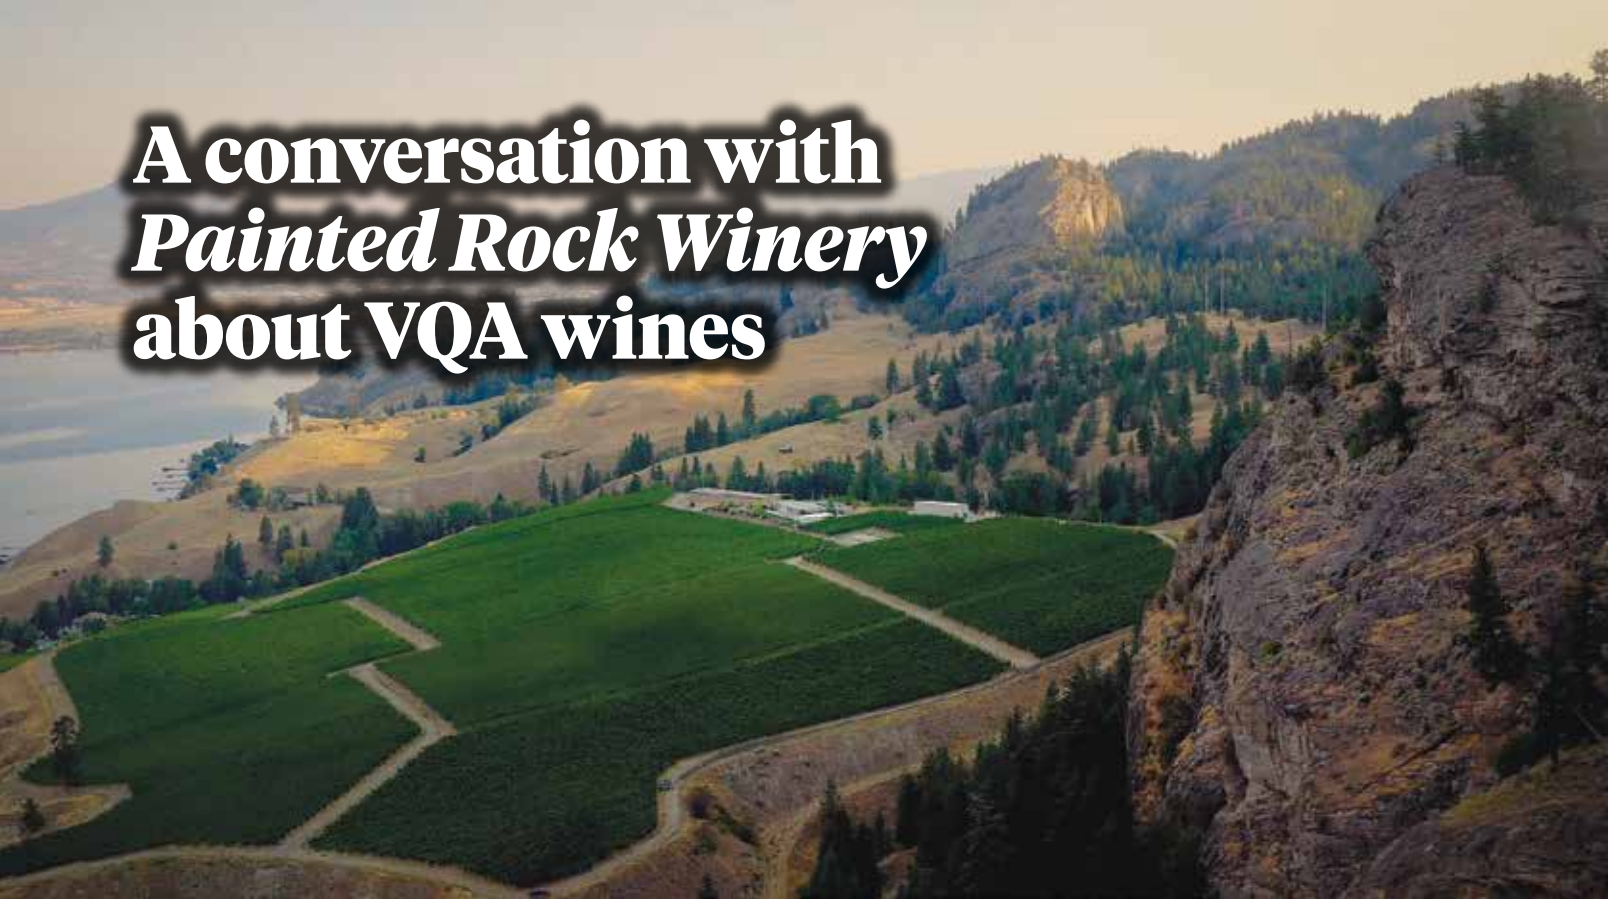

"Clear, coordinated wayfinding strengthens visitor confidence and helps communities showcase what they offer," says Laurel Douglas, CEO of ETSI-BC.

"This project is a strong example of infrastructure that supports both tourism and local businesses."

Now, with a little help from some well-placed, visually appealing signs, the Bottleneck Drive adventure can begin the moment visitors hit the road. ▲

A conversation with Painted Rock Winery about VQA wines

Painted Rock Winery was founded in Penticton, BC by John and Trish Skinner in 2004.

VQA wines must meet specific sugar and brix levels at harvest, and the use of additives is regulated

By Lisa Kopochinski

Vintners Quality Alliance, or VQA, is a regulatory and appellation system which guarantees the high quality and authenticity of origin for Canadian wines made under that system in British Columbia and Ontario.

Similar to regulatory systems in France (AOC), Spain (DO), Italy (DOC), and Germany (QmP), the VQA system allows for sub-appellations, by which the grapes for wines are sourced from extremely specific geographical locations with different soil and climate.

Essentially, VQA wines may be made with grapes from small agricultural yield per vine (which increases quality). They must meet specific sugar and brix levels at harvest, and the use of additives is regulated. In addition, there are also standards regulating the use of certain types of packaging and closures.

In order to receive the VQA designation, wine must undergo testing by the regulating bodies. The VQA logo does not have a standard location on the bottle.

If a consumer wishes to purchase wine from 100-percent Canadian grapes, extra care must be taken to ensure that the wine is not an international Canadian blend.

Crush magazine recently had the opportunity to talk with Lauren Skinner Buksevics, whose family owns Painted Rock Winery in Penticton, about the VQA wines they produce.

Here is our conversation.

Please tell me about Painted Rock Winery. How long has your family had this business and what types of wine do you make/sell?

Lauren: Painted Rock Winery was founded in 2004 by my parents John and Trish Skinner. They bought a fallow apricot orchard and took a year to assess the land, contour and plant. The goal from the beginning was to help raise the bar and profile of Canadian wine both within Canada and abroad with a strict 100 percent estate mandate, dedication to quality and an ambitious team.

My father spent 15 years travelling to international markets introducing them to Painted Rock and Canadian wine. I joined Painted Rock in 2015 after pursuing an MBA in Bordeaux and have grown into the role of Managing Director.

We grow the classic Bordeaux varieties of Merlot, Malbec, Cabernet Franc, Cabernet Sauvignon, Petit Verdot in addition to some Syrah and Chardonnay. We make three blends, our flagship Bordeaux blend Red Icon, a Syrah Cabernet Sauvignon and a Rose. In addition, we make single varietal wines from every grape aside from Petit Verdot which is entirely dedicated to the Red Icon.

Are there specific wines that tend to be more popular?

Lauren: The most popular wines would be our Red Icon, Syrah, Chardonnay and Rose. The Chardonnay is generally only available to our Wine Club because of limited quantities. The Red Icon is our flagship blend and is the best of the vineyard every year and has a loyal following.

We are exceptionally lucky to not only grow Syrah but for it to have survived entirely through the 2024 frost. We now have 21-year-old Syrah vines and it makes for an incredible wine that is popular with our wine club and restaurants alike.

In reality, this makes it sub-economic to do business in any other province because the VQA is siloed by province. Essentially this means that despite being BC VQA, in Ontario we are treated the same as an international wine.

Tell our readers about the requirements regarding sources of grapes for VQA wines.

Lauren: We are 100 percent estate and every wine we produce is VQA, meaning it meets their criteria for quality and packaging and satisfies the tasting panel.

Tell us about the VQA wines your winery produces?

Lauren: Every wine we produce is VQA. All of our wines are made from 100 percent estate grown fruit on Penticton's Skaha Bench. We make each single varietal with 100 percent of the labelled variety for true terroir expression.

What is required to receive a VQA designation?

Lauren: The wine must meet the labelling and packaging requirements as laid out by the BC VQA. We are authorized to use Skaha Bench on our label because the region was designated as an approved sub-geographical indicator. We are allowed to use Estate because we use exclusively grapes grown in our own vineyard.

Please tell me about the interprovincial trade barriers regarding VQA wine and the challenges involved for the industry and wineries like yours.

Lauren: Right now, the VQA designation is just applicable to British Columbia and is governed by the BC Wine Authority. The Ontario VQA has its own set of rules and regulations and does not have authority over BC wine. This means that the VQA rebate we see for sales to the BC Liquor Distribution Board and BC Liquor Stores is not applied to any sales to other provincial liquor boards.

In reality, this makes it sub-economic to do business in any other province because the VQA is siloed by province. Essentially this means that despite being BC VQA, in Ontario we are treated the same as an international wine.

If there was a national VQA program, or the various programs were to align and provinces were to honour the designation by an outside authority, there would be the ability to apply the VQA rebate to sales in other provinces. This would help wineries compete against international imports from heavily subsidized wine regions that are out competing us in our own market because unlike Canadian wineries, their country looks at the wine industry as a whole as not only a point of national pride, but a nation-wide economic engine.

They allow the wineries complete domestic access to their retail, restaurants and consumers. In turn those wineries are able to make the highest return at home and discount to out compete us in markets like Ontario, where the LCBO is an attractive export partner because their volume of order makes them the single largest wine buyer in the world.

Right now, interprovincial trade barriers mean that each province treats us differently. In some, we can ship wine to consumers. In others we can't at all. In others, we can but we need to sign up for a program and remit a tariff. And this is just to private customers. In no province outside BC can we ship wine directly to a restaurant or private liquor store.

Individual wineries are having to jump through regulatory hoops and face punishing markups and taxes despite providing Canadian jobs, paying Canadian wages and growing Canadian agriculture. It is a huge missed economic opportunity as evidenced by the latest Deloitte white paper.

Thank you taking the time to share this information for our readers.

Lauren: You are very welcome. ▲

Okanagan College partners with Niagara College to grow wine education in the valley

Canada's two top wine regions are joining forces in the classroom

By Maria Lee

Earlier this year, Okanagan College and Niagara College signed a memorandum of understanding to bring Niagara's respected Winery and Viticulture curriculum to the Okanagan — a move that will reshape how the next generation of winemakers, vineyard managers, and cellar technicians train for careers in the industry.

The agreement allows Okanagan College to deliver a version of Niagara's Winery and Viticulture Technician program customized for the Okanagan region. For an industry that depends on a steady supply of skilled labour — from the vineyard to the cellar to the lab — that's a meaningful development.

A pioneer program comes west

Niagara Colleges Winery and Viticulture Technician program has a claim to fame in Canadian wine education. Launched in 2000, it was the first program of its kind in the country and is housed in Canada's first and only commercial teaching winery.

The program falls under Niagara's School of Wine, Beer, and Spirits, which also runs teaching brewery and distillery operations and produces a lineup of award-winning wines each year.

For Okanagan College, adopting that curriculum means students here will train under a framework that's been refined over a quarter-century, rather than building a program from scratch.

Okanagan College Provost and Vice-President, Academic, Dr. Samantha Lenci framed the partnership as a direct response to what the region's employers are asking for.

"By collaborating with Niagara College, we are strengthening learning opportunities for students and delivering programs that reflect the needs of our communities and local industry," she says.

"These industries are critical to our region, and we're excited to expand our support of the Okanagan and Shuswap through relevant, applied programming."

The MOU covers more than curriculum sharing. It also opens the door to credit transfer between the two colleges, student and faculty exchanges, and joint research and events — the kind of connective tissue that could eventually link Ontario's and B.C.'s wine industries more closely than they've ever been.

Built for the next chapter at Okanagan College

The timing lines up with a bigger institutional investment in food, wine, and tourism. Okanagan College is currently building a Centre for Food, Wine and Tourism at its Kelowna campus, and the Niagara curriculum will become available through that centre starting after it opens. The centre will house food, beverage and tourism programming, a teaching restaurant and other programs delivered under the college's Hall School of Business and Entrepreneurship as well as other OC programs.

Joe Baker, Dean of the Hall School of Business and Entrepreneurship, connected the partnership to the region's broader identity as a food and wine destination.

"As a UNESCO City of Gastronomy, our region is uniquely positioned to lead at the intersection of food, wine and place," Baker says.

Through the new centre, he added that the college is "building an academic foundation that will educate future leaders in viticulture, winemaking and winery management."

One intended to help the Okanagan Valley sustain its reputation while shaping the future of wine, tourism, and culinary excellence well beyond its borders.

Training available now while the new curriculum takes shape

Okanagan College already offers two entry points into the industry through InspirED, its continuing studies and corporate training division — both delivered out of the Penticton campus.

The Viticulture Certificate is built for people who want to manage a vineyard or work in grape growing. Over 24 instructional weeks, delivered part-time in a blended format, students cover the science behind grape growing, vineyard management, equipment operation and the business side of running a vineyard, capped off with a 40-hour work placement. The next intake starts in January 2027.

The Winery Assistant Certificate, also 24 weeks and part-time, prepares students to work alongside winemakers in an entry-level cellar role. Coursework spans fermentation, cellar and brewery operations, quality and safety, and sensory evaluation, with field trips and a practicum rounding out the hands-on side.

Because the program touches on production more broadly where wine, cider, beer, and spirits are all covered, graduates come out with a wider lens on the fermented beverage industry, not just wine. It also starts its next intake in January 2027.

Both programs are designed for working adults rather than full-time students fresh out of high school, reflecting a continuing studies model built around flexibility: evening online classes paired with some in-person Saturday sessions, plus a practicum component that gets learners into real vineyards and cellars before they graduate.

Together, the two credentials give the Okanagan wine industry a training pipeline it can lean on today, while the Niagara partnership builds toward a more comprehensive program down the road — one grown, quite literally, from a partnership between the two ends of the country’s wine map.

The UBC Wine Research Centre

The Canadian wine industry is a "canary in the coal mine" for the global wine world to reference in this era of rapid climate change

By Ruth King, Coordinator for the WRC

A "Centre" has a specific definition in academia, unique to the institution. At UBC, the core mission of the Wine Research Centre (WRC) is to support the development of a sustainable Canadian grape and wine industry through world-class research, excellence in wine education, practical solutions, and knowledge mobilization. The WRC has been around for more than 25 years. The core function of the WRC has morphed over time to suit the needs of the industry and faculty priorities, but the mission has always had a strong industry focus.

Our people

The WRC is led by Dr. Simone Castellarin, a professor of viticulture and plant physiology from the Faculty of Land and Food Systems, stationed at our Vancouver campus with support from Coordinator, Ruth King, BSc PAg Ruth works to connect academic, government, and industry partners to identify challenges and opportunities for research to improve BC and Canada's resilience as a wine producing region.

The WRC is currently made up of a cross-campus collection of 14 researchers from 6 unique faculties. Our research spans the more obvious natural sciences (e.g., soil ecology, plant physiology, microbiology, and chemistry) as well as social sciences (e.g., human geography, socio-political science and business).

Research clusters

Viticulture and Climate Resilience: This cluster of laboratories seeks to understand the biological processes that regulate grape quality, identifying the best sites and soils, developing strategies to improve grape quality and vineyard health are to sustain the production of premium wines in the face of climate change and extreme weather events.

Grape and Wine Biotechnology: This cluster of researchers explores chemical and biological aspects of grape and wine production including metabolomics, smoke-taint, and yeast. With labs located in Vancouver and Kelowna and industry partners across the province, these teams strive to unlock answers to local and global wine production challenges of the present and future.

Ruth King is the Research Coordinator at the UBC Wine Research Centre.

Wine Economics and Culture: This cluster of researchers is focused on social science aspects of the wine world that impact the competitiveness of a wine territory. This cluster explores regional identity, optimizing regional governance, agricultural economics, wine region development, consumer demand, and global wine trends.

Research facilities

Our research is conducted in many locations around the province. In the lower mainland we have the Core Analytical Facility. Open to the public, the Analytical Core Facility provides specialized equipment for the analysis of small molecules on a fee-for-service basis. Part of the Faculty of Land and Food Systems at UBC, this is a shared resource facility offering analytical instrument services, data and analysis training, as well as expertise on analytical research projects.

The UBC Wine Library was established in 2002 and is located in the Food, Nutrition and Health Building on the Vancouver campus. With the early donation from several wineries in the Okanagan Valley, the library collection was established in order to study which grape varieties do best in specific microclimates in BC, and to study the long-term aging abilities of those wines. The wine collection is also used in the Introduction to Wine Science course as well as the Grapes to Glass Seminar Series taught by Professor Jay Martiniuk.

In the Okanagan, we have a state-of-the-art greenhouse called the Plant Growth Facility that opened in 2020. This 5,000 square foot facility has computer-controlled light and temperature programs. Four separate rooms within the glasshouse, providing ample space for large projects, and allowing for isolation of different growth and treatment protocols. In addition, two walk-in growth chambers allow for plants to be exposed to temperatures as low as +5.

Additionally, we have greenhouse and vineyard space at the UBC Farm on the Vancouver campus, as well as plant pathology, tissue culture, and microbiology lab facilities at both campuses.

A selection of current projects

Dr. Wesley Zandberg of the Chemistry Department on the Okanagan campus studies various aspects of carbohydrates in general and has several projects around the influence of wildfire smoke on grapes and wine. His current approach is focused on prevention and mitigation strategies as well as treatment techniques for the finished wines.

Dr. Donna Senese from the Irving K. Barber Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences on the Okanagan campus studies the sustainability of rural communities with wine regions and agritourism industries. Although UBC does not currently offer any full degree programs, we do have several wine and viticulture courses. One particularly epic offering, GEOG/SUST 491 "Selected Topics in Geography and Sustainability: Rural Sustainability: Wine; Food and Tourism in Central Italy", was a co-creation between the Castello Sonnino International Education Centre in Tuscany, Italy, and Dr. Senese.

Through this course she takes students on a four-week trip to Tuscany. Students witness the intense passion that leads agricultural businesses and the impact the industry has on the local community. Many come back forever changed by the inspirational stories of the relatively small Italian villages they visit.

Dr. Susan Murch, PAg is an expert in plant morphogenesis, plant growth regulation, Vitis sp. tissue culture and mass propagation of grape varieties and rootstocks as well as an expert in wine and grape metabolomics—the measure of all metabolites in vines, grapes, and wines. Through her work with the Plant Secondary Metabolite Analytical Research Team (PlantSMART) she researches chemistry of plants and how plant chemistry affects human health using analytical chemistry, mass spectrometry, biotechnology, metabolomics and hormonomics approaches.

Dr. Simone Castellarin and his laboratory specializes in viticulture and berry crop physiology and investigates the ripening processes in grapes, blueberries, and raspberries, and the biological mechanisms that determine berry composition by analyzing at the genomic level pathways that control fruit ripening and composition, and how these pathways are modulated under different environmental conditions. The laboratory aims to select genotypes adapted to BC's various climatic conditions and develop new agronomical strategies for enhancing desirable berry qualities. Such strategies are crucial for mitigating climate change effects on grapes and berry crop productions, and for growing premium grapes, blueberries, and raspberries in BC and Canada.

Dr. Vivien Measday and her lab studies yeast populations associated with the vineyards of British Columbia's Okanagan Valley and Vancouver Island. They partner with the BC Wine Grape Council and associated wineries to perform spontaneous fermentations and isolation of the wine yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae (S. cerevisiae). Using high-throughput genotypic analyses, they generate a genetic fingerprint of each strain and compare it to a fingerprint database of commercial wine yeast strains that they have generated. Their goal is to identify S. cerevisiae indigenous to the Okanagan Valley and Vancouver Island with enological potential. Dr. Measday is also leading the UBC Research Excellence Cluster named Wine Production and Climate Change.

Looking ahead

The Canadian wine industry is a "canary in the coal mine" for the global wine world to reference in this era of rapid climate change. With the wine industry in British Columbia being positioned right on the edge of viability with its northern coordinates and semi-arid Okanagan Valley, there are endless opportunities for research to aid in optimization and resilience.

We experience every challenge imaginable – drought, high heat, extreme cold, humidity and socio-political challenges that keep the cost of production high. As one winemaker friend once said, "we would just stop, but knowing what is possible here, we simply cannot.". ▲

Carbon manufacture/capture

Carbon removal can work alongside existing agricultural practices, without changing land use

By Harris Ivens, Farmer Operations Manager at UNDO Carbon

Close up of silicate rock being spread.

As Canada's wine industry looks for practical ways to reduce its environmental footprint, enhanced rock weathering (ERW) offers a promising opportunity: removing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere while supporting healthier soils and more resilient crops.

Based in Kingston, Ontario, UNDO is a leading enhanced rock weathering project developer, working with Canadian farmers to spread finely crushed silicate rock across agricultural land. The process accelerates a natural form of carbon removal, with benefits extending from the soil to the vine.

The science behind enhanced rock weathering

Natural rock weathering is one of the Earth's long-term carbon removal processes. Rainwater absorbs atmospheric carbon dioxide, forming a weak acid that reacts with silicate rocks as they break down. This converts CO_2 into dissolved bicarbonate, which travels through waterways to the ocean, where carbon can be stored for thousands of years or longer.

Enhanced rock weathering accelerates this process by spreading finely crushed rock across agricultural land, increasing the surface area available for weathering. Here at UNDO, we use wollastonite, a naturally occurring calcium silicate mineral sourced locally from Canadian Wollastonite in Seeley's Bay, Ontario.

As the mineral weathers, it absorbs CO_2 and gradually releases calcium and silicon into the soil. Calcium can help manage soil pH and support soil health, while silicon can contribute to plant strength and resilience.

Crucially for farmers, this means carbon removal can work alongside existing agricultural practices, without changing land use.

A vineyard perspective

For Kurt Simcic, Director of Viticulture at Sebastian Farms, a certified organic vineyard in British Columbia's Okanagan Valley, the agricultural benefits are a major reason to keep using wollastonite.

"We grow ultra-premium Pinot Noir, Chardonnay, Riesling and more. Wollastonite helps with our vine nutrition. It also provides nutrients to 'toughen' the plants up and make them less vulnerable to pests, disease and some of the extreme environmental conditions we face.

"We are trying to reduce our carbon footprint every year, but it's the benefits we see in the vineyard that keep us coming back to Canadian Wollastonite. It's a great product that helps our vines, soils and environment."

Growing the opportunity

Experiences like Simcic's highlight the potential to connect carbon removal with the practical priorities of vineyard management. As research and field monitoring progress, ERW can offer Canadian winegrowers another tool to support soil health, build crop resilience and contribute to climate goals.

From vineyard to cellar: A new stage for Vitis-import

Importing grapevines from France had brought Vitis-import into regular contact with nurseries and other vineyard suppliers.

In July 2026, Vitis-import installed two French oak foudres from Tonnellerie Allary and an Aromy concrete tank from CLC Srl at a winery in Quebec. The company had already helped expand the vineyard; this time, its work with the producer extended into the cellar. The installation drew on relationships with equipment manufacturers established well beforehand.

Importing grapevines from France had brought Vitis-import into regular contact with nurseries and other vineyard suppliers. As its work expanded to planting, trellising and vineyard machinery, the team began looking ahead to the equipment clients might need once their vineyards were producing grapes. It approached cellar equipment manufacturers during trips to France to discuss how their products could reach Canadian producers.

Major trade shows such as SITEVI and VINITECH-SIFEL in France offered opportunities to make those contacts. Regular factory visits and technical training also allowed the team to see equipment firsthand and speak directly with the people making it. Through these exchanges, Vitis-import established relationships with Tonnellerie Allary and CLC in anticipation of future projects in Canada.

In France, public authorities have launched a permanent vine-pulling program to reduce wine production potential in response to structural difficulties in several winegrowing regions. Some of Vitis-import's nursery and equipment suppliers also report fewer planting projects and slower business at home. These conditions have strengthened their interest in developing opportunities in Canada alongside Vitis-import.

A European Network Already in Place

Vitis-import could build on shipping arrangements it already used for vineyard supplies. Its French partner SLPA (Société Landaise de Profilage Acier) manufactures posts and other trellising materials and handles European logistics for Vitis-import. That relationship gave the team a practical starting point for importing cellar equipment.

Containers are prepared and shipped to Canada throughout the year. When schedules and available space allow, selected cellar equipment can be included in those shipments. Producers can therefore discuss cellar equipment with the same company that supplies their grapevines or helps establish their vineyards, using an import network already serving the Canadian market.

As clients began asking whether Vitis-import could obtain equipment for their wineries, the team could turn to manufacturers it already knew. At the same winery, that preparation led to the installation of the Tonnellerie Allary foudres and the CLC concrete tank. The producer plans to work with selected cuvées separately in the foudres. With the concrete tank, the aim is to preserve fruit expression and freshness.

Building and Replanting Vineyards Across Canada

Those requests for cellar equipment grew out of relationships established in the vineyard. Over the 2025 and 2026 planting seasons, Vitis-import supported major vineyard establishment projects across Quebec, from supplying grapevines and carrying out GPS-guided grapevine planting to installing the INT3NSE™ trellising system for winter protection. Vineyard establishment is increasingly planned with mechanization in mind, with layouts and trellising designed to facilitate as many mechanized operations as possible. Together, these projects represented more than 150,000 grapevines.

In Quebec, approximately 90 percent of the grapevines planted by Vitis-import in 2026 were Vitis vinifera. Elsewhere, crews worked on projects shaped by different circumstances. Work in Ontario included vineyard expansion, while several British Columbia projects involved replanting after the 2023 and 2024 freeze. In Nova Scotia, replacement planting continued in blocks affected by the 2023 polar vortex.

To support this work across Canada, Vitis-import operates from its main base in Quebec and a permanent location in Keremeos, British Columbia. Both locations house vineyard equipment and stocks of posts and other trellising materials. With two grapevine planters and two post planters, crews can work in the East and West at the same time. As Ontario operations expand, a Niagara base is planned for 2027.

Working with producers through these stages gives the team opportunities to discuss what comes next for each property. Vineyard establishment remains central to that work, while the supplier relationships and shipping arrangements in Europe now allow those discussions to include cellar equipment. Producers planning a vineyard or cellar project can approach Vitis-import to discuss their needs.

The Vitis-import team will be exhibiting alongside SLPA at VINITECH-SIFEL in Bordeaux, December 1–3, 2026. Visitors can find them in the Cultivation Techniques sector, Hall 1, aisle B, booth 3102. ▲

More markets, more rules: What Canada's Direct-to-Consumer Agreement means for wineries

By Lee Chitty

On July 21, 2026, nine provinces signed an operating agreement allowing Canadian wineries to sell and ship wine directly to consumers (DTC) across provincial borders, a channel that provincial liquor monopolies have long kept closed. Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan are parties to the agreement.

In a 2018 case called R v Comeau, the Supreme Court of Canada declined to open Canada's interprovincial liquor market. Eight years later, the provinces have collectively agreed to open those borders. That access, however, stops far short of a single national market. Each province still sets its own rules on authorization, fees, mark-ups, taxes, and reporting obligations, leaving wineries to navigate a different rulebook in every market they enter.

What the DTC Agreement Covers

The DTC Agreement opens the door for wineries to sell directly to individuals buying wine for personal use, not for resale or commercial purposes. The wine must be produced in the winery's home province; bottling alone does not qualify. The agreement also permits cross-selling, allowing wineries to sell wine produced by other wineries in their home province, provided the destination province allows it. Newfoundland and Labrador is the only participating province that does not permit cross-selling.

Nine Markets, Nine Rulebooks

Different provincial compliance burdens may shape where wineries choose to expand and focus their marketing efforts. Six of the nine provinces require producers to obtain DTC authorization, while Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Saskatchewan list no such requirement. In Alberta, an out-of-province winery must register with the Alberta Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Commission, submit an Acknowledgement and Undertaking, remit applicable fees and report monthly sales. Ontario requires out-of-province producers to obtain authorization through the Liquor Control Board of Ontario (LCBO), but reporting is quarterly rather than monthly. Provinces also retain control over minimum pricing, age verification and restrictions on when or where alcohol may be purchased, consumed, or delivered. In Ontario, DTC sales of 100% Canadian wine carry no LCBO mark-up, although producers must still file quarterly reports and remit container deposits.

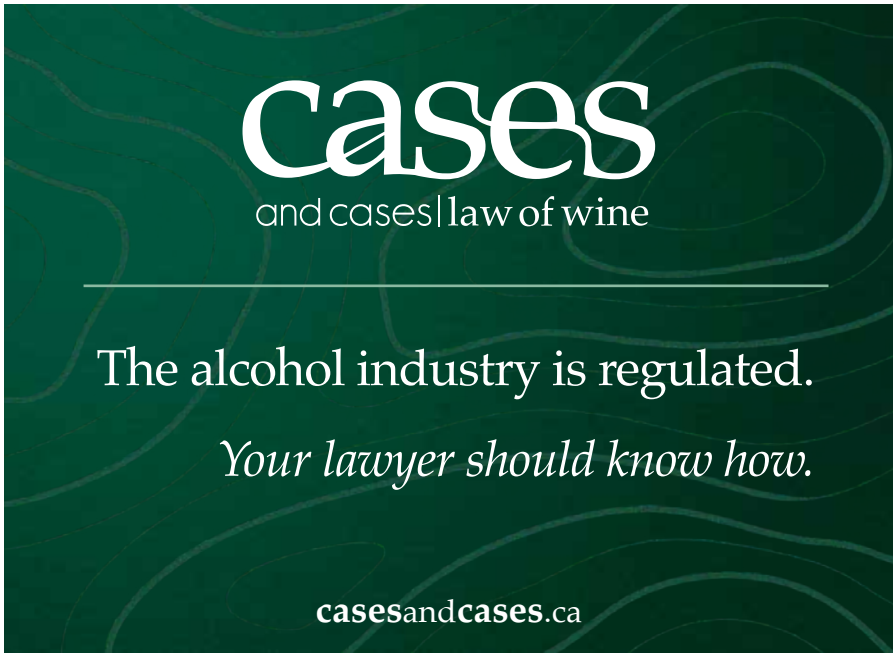

A winery can obtain every DTC authorization a destination province requires and still face corporate registration requirements. The key question is whether the winery is "carrying on business" in that province, and each province draws that line differently. In Ontario, remote sales and delivery alone generally do not trigger registration, though a local representative, inventory, or office could trigger the requirement. Nova Scotia's Corporations Registration Act defines carrying on business broadly, potentially requiring wineries to register even without a physical presence in the province.

What the DTC Agreement Does Not Promise

The DTC Agreement opens new opportunities to reach consumers across Canada but guarantees no winery a permanent place in these markets. The agreement creates no legal obligations or enforceable rights, leaving each province free to grant, withhold, change or revoke authorizations under its own regime. Provinces may also change their entry rules, including cross-selling and authorization requirements, by notifying the other parties in writing and making best efforts to give 30 days' notice. A province may withdraw from the agreement altogether on six months' notice. For wineries, entering a new provincial market means accepting that the rules of entry may change quickly.

The July 2026 Agreement finally brings interprovincial DTC sales out of the shadows and into a clearer legal framework, though the rules remain far from uniform. Wineries should review the rules of each destination province and seek professional advice on additional registration, tax, reporting and delivery obligations before selling into that market. ▲

Good Robot Brewing ranks among Canada's top growing companies

A large part of the company's growth came from being willing to rethink the business as the market changed

By Lisa Kopochinski

Good Robot Brewing was formed in Halifax in 2015, by Angus Campbell, Doug Kehoe, and Joshua Counsil.

Good Robot Brewing was formed in Halifax, Nova Scotia in 2015, by three individuals: Angus Campbell, Doug Kehoe, and Joshua Counsil.

The trio started with a small brewery on Robie Street and a hospitality business built around quirky beer experiences and community. Production has since expanded to Elmsdale, Nova Scotia where The Beverage Factory manufactures beverages for Good Robot and other brands. Today, the business combines its own beverage brands, hospitality venues, and contract manufacturing.

Crush magazine recently had the opportunity to speak with Joshua Council, co-founder of Good Robot Brewing and The Beverage Factory about the company and its large revenue growth.

Your company had revenue growth of 262 percent from 2022 to 2025. What do you attribute your success to?

Joshua Counsil: A big part of that growth came from being willing to rethink the business as the market changed. We expanded beyond making and selling our own beer to helping other companies produce their beverages, while continuing to build Good Robot's brands and hospitality experiences. Customer service has been central to attracting national and international clients to our facility in Nova Scotia. The 262 percent figure represents company-wide revenue growth, and we're proud of the team and partners who made it possible.

Please tell our readers about The Beverage Factory.

JC: The Beverage Factory is Good Robot's manufacturing arm in Elmsdale developing, producing, and packaging beverages for our own brands and other companies. Our work extends beyond beer into categories such as ready-to-drink cocktails, sparkling waters, and non-alcoholic beverages. We can support formulation as well as manufacturing, canning and carton packaging, depending on what a client needs. Having operated our own consumer brand, we understand how much a production partner's quality, communication, and reliability matter.

The Beverage Factory is Good Robot's manufacturing arm that develops, produces, and packages beverages for its own brands and other companies.

Tell us about your move into contract manufacturing. What did this involve and how long did it take?

JC: The move was a substantial evolution from our small Robie Street brewery into a dedicated manufacturing operation in Elmsdale. It required investment in equipment, production systems, quality assurance, and the people needed to handle a broader range of beverages. It also meant learning to serve other brand owners, each with different products, expectations, and timelines. This was a multi-year transition, and we continue to expand our capabilities as our clients' needs evolve.

How do you help emerging brands bring ideas to market and support expansion?

JC: We begin by understanding the product, its intended market and what the brand already has in place. Some clients arrive with a commercial formula. Others need help developing one, and we can now provide formulation support. From there, we work through production requirements, packaging, and quality expectations to build a practical manufacturing plan. A production partnership gives brands access to equipment and expertise without having to build their own factory, allowing them to focus more of their resources on customers and distribution.

What advice can you offer winery readers regarding diversification and production partnerships?

JC: Start with a clear customer need and a realistic route to market before investing heavily in a new category. A production partner can help you test an opportunity without immediately taking on the cost and complexity of new equipment. Ask detailed questions about quality systems, minimum runs, packaging, lead times, and communication, and make sure the economics work for both businesses. Diversification can create opportunity, but the product still needs a sales and marketing plan: making it is only part of the job.

Thanks so much for sharing this information.

JC: You are welcome. ▲

Good Robot's Beverage manufacturing business helps Canadian farmers and entrepreneurs bring products to market

Good Robot Brewing Company has ranked No. 107 overall and No. 9 in Manufacturing on The Globe and Mail's 2026 Report on Business magazine ranking of Canada's Top Growing Companies, with revenue growth of 262 percent from 2022 to 2025.

The primary engine of that growth is The Beverage Factory by Good Robot in Elmsdale, Nova Scotia, which helps other brands develop, produce, and package their drinks. Its work spans beer, ready-to-drink cocktails, probiotic sodas, sparkling water, juice, and non-alcoholic beverages, giving Canadian entrepreneurs a domestic option for beverage manufacturing.

For farmers, that support can create revenue from a difficult season. When storms or a poor season leave them with Grade B fruit, The Beverage Factory helps turn it into juice they can sell regionally.

"Many of our clients are farmers," says Joshua Counsil, Co-Founder and Director of Marketing and Communications at Good Robot Brewing.

"One farmer was selling their apples to New England at a poor margin with expensive logistics costs. With The Beverage Factory, they can turn those apples into Canadian-made juice and trial a new revenue stream."

For emerging beverage brands, The Beverage Factory provides a Canadian production partner to help bring their ideas to market and support expansion across the country and internationally. One Alberta energy drink startup described the impact in a message to the team: "You made my dreams come true."

"Our team has helped Canadian beverage companies get their products into Costco and reach international markets," says Counsil. "That gives more people the chance to discover Canadian brands."

The Beverage Factory produces approximately 120 products for nearly 40 companies. By helping Canadian brands produce and grow at home, its work supports a wider choice of Canadian-made drinks for consumers and retailers.

"Our focus during these years has been rooted in supporting a beverage industry and region experiencing increasingly challenging economic pressures," says Angus Campbell, Co-Founder and CEO of Good Robot Brewing.

"We believe this recognition is evidence of steps toward countering those pressures through collaboration – all thanks to our incredible team, entrepreneurs we work with, and suppliers who support us."

Founded by three friends who left engineering careers to open a brewery, Good Robot also operates three award-winning tourism-hospitality venues in Nova Scotia. Its packaged beer has become one of the fastest-growing brands in its category at the NSLC and the No. 1 Nova Scotia draft in New Brunswick, led by Diablo, its Mexican-style lager with lime and jalapeño.

Canada's Top Growing Companies ranks Canadian companies by three-year revenue growth. Launched in 2019, the editorial ranking celebrates the achievements of innovative businesses across the country.
