THE WEDDING THIEF

HELEN ADAM

Do you ever find yourself zoning out whilst driving on a familiar road? Does it ever feel like time has passed and you cannot remember what you have been doing? Imagine if this kept on happening. This is the predicament facing Flora. Her gaps of missing time are getting longer; her life is moving in a dangerous direction.

“A beautifully observed, moving and engrossing novel – at times hilarious and at other times heartbreaking. I was captivated.” Kate Glanville, author of ‘Heartstones’ and other popular books.

FURTHER BEYOND

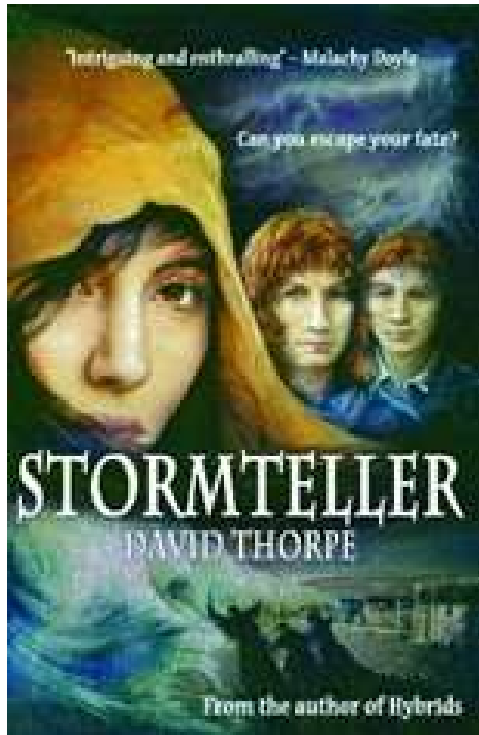

VALERIE NORRIS

‘Reading, writing and walking: such an agreeable way to pass the days...’ This is Rhian’s discovery after she takes early retirement and travels to spend time on solitary retreat in a beautiful corner of Wales.

From there her life unfolds in ways she could not possibly have foreseen. She revisits fragments of her childhood, reconciles fragile family relationships, survives a bad bout of flu and makes new friendships, especially with her rather eccentric neighbour. Her story and his become entwined and lead to life-changing events for both of them in her through-the-looking-glass existence.

Rhian discovers that the poetry she has longed to write takes inspiration from her surroundings and echoes her inner journey.

STORMTELLER

DAVID THORPE

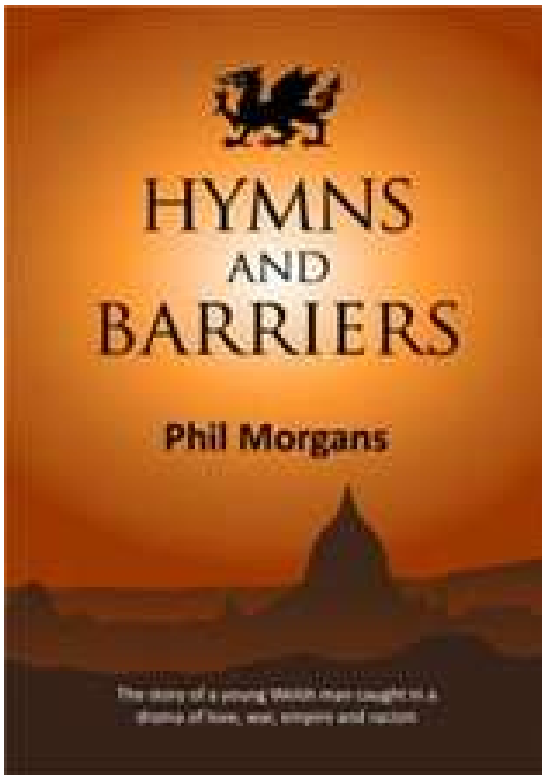

If our lives are governed by forces outside our control, where can we find hope?

When a storm surge destroys Tomos' luxury home and his parents die, and Bryn's eco-home is torched and his parents killed by starving marauders, these two rivals for the same girl, Eira are forced to rely upon each other for survival in the wild uplands of Wales.

One of them will die, but not before they discover the astonishing bond that joins them together. And none of these three teenagers are aware that they are living out an ancient rivalry between fabulous beings – such as Ceridwen, the Welsh Goddess of Inspiration – who are seeking to rewrite the endings of their own stories.

This bewitching drama set in the very near future entwines Celtic myth and climate-changed destinies to answer the fundamental question: can we escape our apparent fate?

THE GREAT WELSH AUNTIE NOVEL

JOHN GERAINT

Election Night, February 1974. On a Rhondda bus stop, surrounded by ghosts of the Tonypandy Riots, a painfully thin 17-year-old makes a vow that will change the course of history. Well, of his story, anyway...

Richly comic and keenly intelligent, heartfelt and ironic, fizzing with wit and allusion, John Geraint's seriously playful approach to the past succeeds in questioning – and arguing with – all our assumptions about the place and the period it conjures up.

“A veritable Tonypandemonium, full to the brim with bright life and vivid character, all told with oodles of humour and tongue-in-cheek self-awareness.

It's a pulsing story for the ages gathered from a small town which claims a big place in Welsh history just as it does in one boy's clearly aching, breaking heart.” Jon Gower, writer and critic

IANT

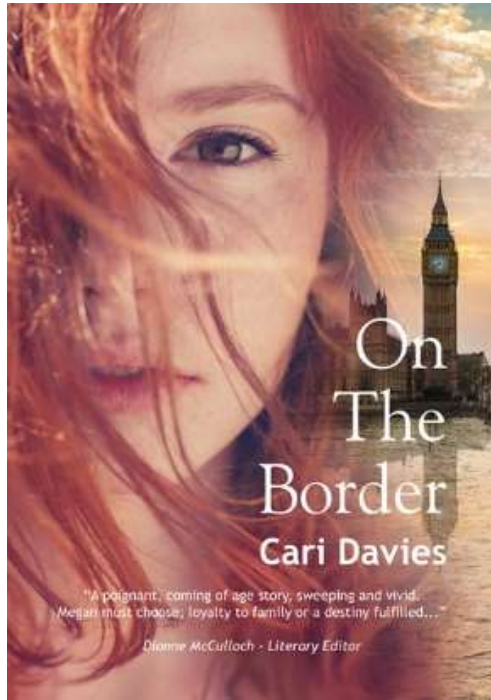

STEVE BLANDFORD

A novel about a man propelled into a violent and unstable world and then abandoned back to the peaceful landscapes of his childhood.

Moving between the battlefields north of Salonika and a quiet corner of the Dee Valley; Iant is written against the backdrop of the mass slaughter of the Great War. A tale of the powerful emotional awakening of a young man and ultimately a person who must struggle to find a life worth living back home.

Iant is a story set amongst one of the most unfortunate generations in history; one that saw two world wars. It speaks to people of all generations whose lives are profoundly changed by the powerful forces of war and who must try and make peace with the aftermath.

ON THE BORDER

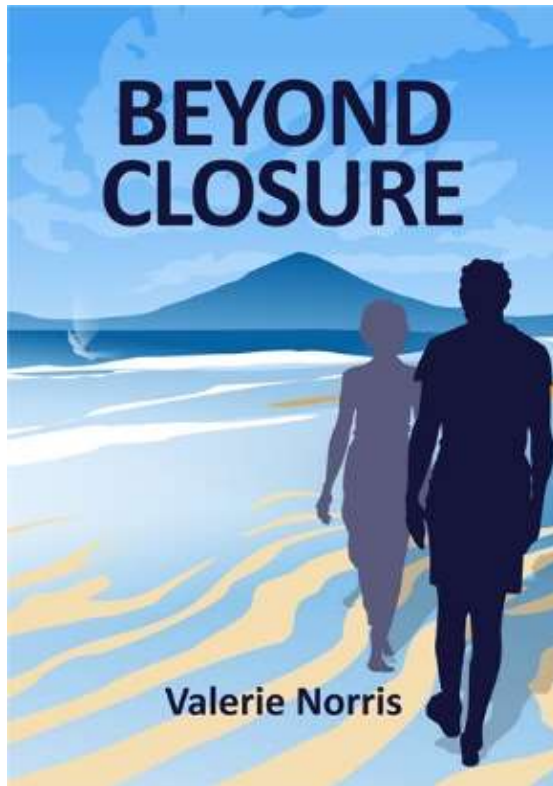

CARI DAVIES

Megan Owen, a teenager, is torn between two opposing worlds. One in Wales, one in England. And between two diverse lads – Welsh wild boy Iolo, and the cultured English Hugo.

As she moves through adolescence to adulthood, experiencing both the rollercoaster of farming life in Wales in the late 1950's, and the turbulence of the post-war cultural revolution of London, England, we see her battle to decide where she truly belongs, and with whom. Will it be the world of nature, farming and tradition in Wales? Or, the brave new sophisticated world flowering in London as it heads into the hippy sixties? Is it possible for love and personal empowerment to co-exist in these times?

Through heartache and drama, Megan discovers there's no easy answer. No easy way to make choices, either. Particularly when fate will keep interfering...

VALERIE NORRIS

A golden triangle in a pretty golden life...

That is how Simon describes the arrangement between his workplace as a psychotherapist, the home of his ex-wife Lisa and son, and his girlfriend Cora's flat. It signifies for him the happy equilibrium of his existence. Then Fleur, an old client of Simon's, makes contact again for more professional help dealing with the aftermath of her husband's untimely death in a little Canarian town and this careful balance begins to unravel. As Fleur's complex and unusual bereavement issues unfold, and then move towards a kind of resolution, Simon's own life starts to spiral out of control. At the same time the dynamics of the practice where Simon works are undergoing their own upheavals.

These changing events and relationships force Simon to confront himself and his beliefs. Has he come to terms with guilt from the past? Is it time to step out from the shadow of the old Simon?

PRETERNATURAL SAGACITY

DAVIES LYNCH

A series of disturbing dreams make Bran Sage, a modern-day aeronautical engineer, increasingly aware of the story of his great-grandparents, Henry, a coalminer, and Sarah the love of Henry's life. Are the dreams childhood memories, or something else?

Bran is determined to find out.

Henry Sage is committed to making dangerous pits safer for the coalminers, while Bran is driven to improve aviation safety. Although separated in time by more than a century and vastly different social conditions, hazardous work and complex problem solving provide the common ground that forge the ethics and noble character of the two men.

Ravens appear in the story as a mystical thread guiding both generations to trust their instinct and carve out a path to increased self-awareness. The ravens are a visual symbol and the singer-songwriter Bob Dylan's lyrics provide the metaphors that encourage Bran in his search for life's deeper meaning.

BETSY ROBERTS

N.G.NEVILLE

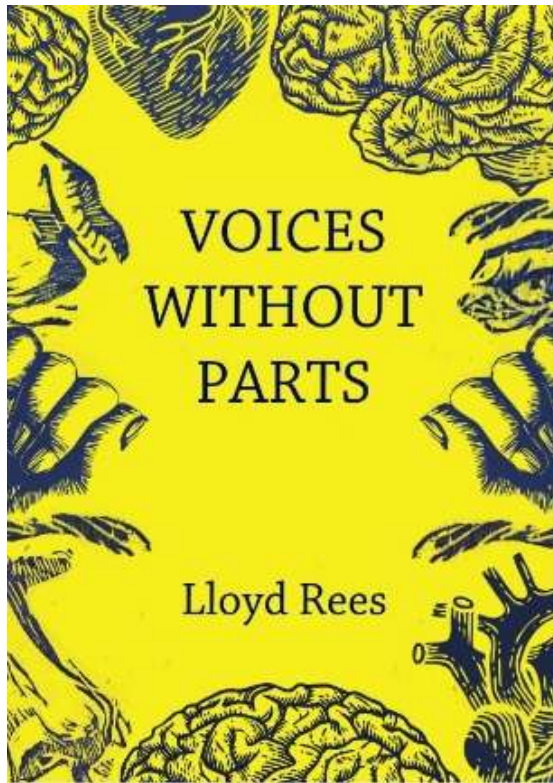

A tale of survival in the early Americas!

This story is set in the early pioneering era of late eighteenth and early nineteenth century America. It is a gripping, horrifying tale based in part on true historical events and characters.

The central character, Betsy Roberts, was kidnapped, abused, then was caught up in the evil, murderous activities of the notorious Harpe brothers, Micajah and Wiley Harpe, The Terrible Harpes. She later became a perpetrator, unwillingly at first but later complicit in their heinous crimes.

How she survived this truly appalling experience, even eventually prospering later in New York during the eighteen hundreds, and creating a successful business and family dynasty there as depicted in the second part of this story, is illustrated through her extraordinary courage and determination – but at a cost!

VOICES WITHOUT PARTS

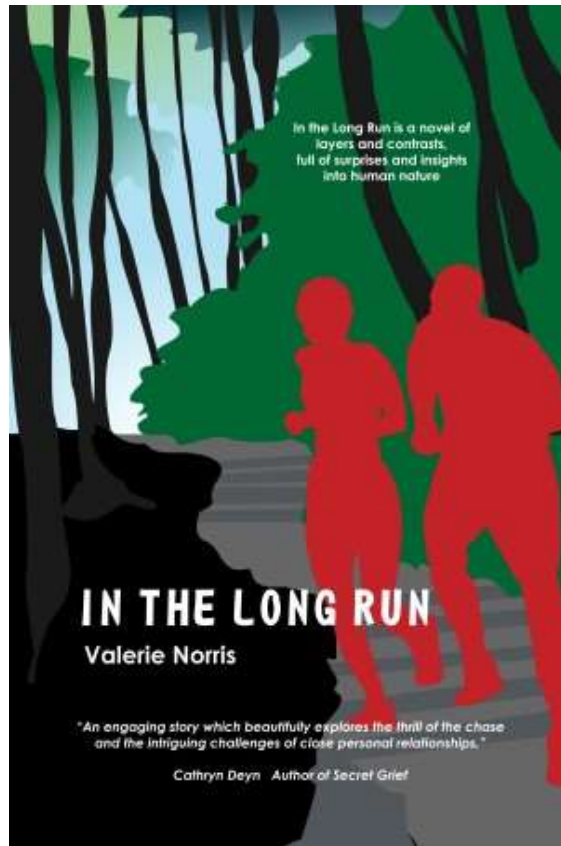

LLOYD REES

In the green room of history silent (or silenced) characters rehearse their parts for their big chance on stage – Crusoe, Lizzie Siddall, Connie Chatterley, and the indefatigable Trabb's Boy among them. But what do they have to say?

The thirteen interlinked stories span history and genre and are littered with fascinating literary references, but they all show us people who are disfigured or silenced in some way. Often the reasons for that disfigurement are unfathomable. Nevertheless, these stories contain a good deal of humour and are beautifully written.

One cannot fail to enjoy the rollercoaster ride but also you realise that you are dealing with an alternative set of ideas about narrative, history, truth and action, as well as ideas about personal loss, solitude and futility. Despite this panoply of intellectual questions, the author has not forgotten to tell fascinating stories that link together subtly and linger in the mind like dreams.

IN THE LONG RUN

VALERIE NORRIS

For Kitty, getting a place in the 1992 London Marathon is a dream come true. When by chance Kitty meets Malcolm, another new marathoner, they decide to train together. And so begins an unlikely alliance that not only affects them but also draws in Kitty's husband Rob, who is the landlord of the local village pub, and Malcolm's unhappy wife Celia.

The relationship and emotions between these two couples, separated by class, age and life-experience, becomes more complex as the marathon training builds, escalating to the climax of Marathon day itself and its aftermath. Key elements of each person's struggles are exposed and brought to a head as the story unfolds: Kitty's dissatisfaction with her role in the pub, Rob's ingrained deference to his overbearing mother, Malcolm's and Celia's grief and breakdown of communication.

THE APRIL LETTERS

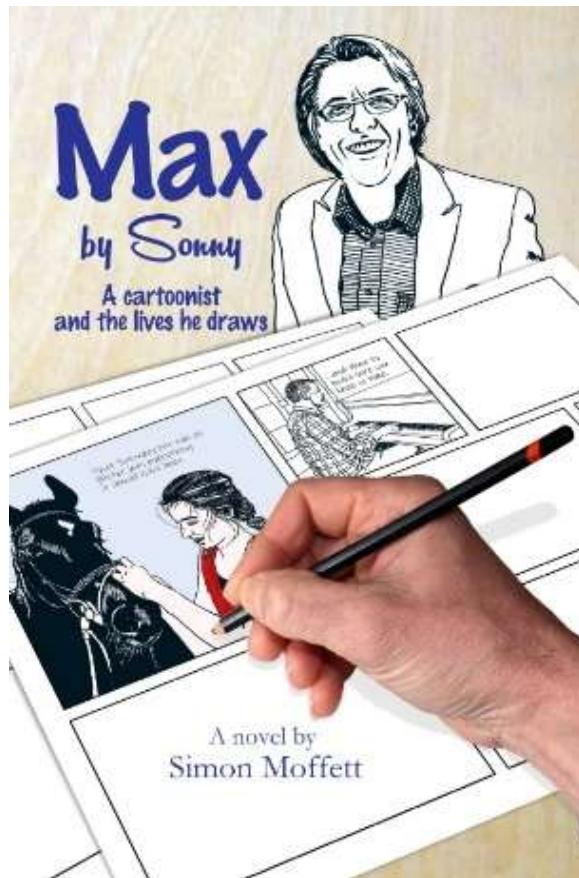

VALERIE NORRIS

Loneliness. It can lead to out-of-character behaviour. The solitary figure who sits confined in a small room, hunched over a table and writing feverishly, knows this only too well.

Young Susan Smith's world was shattered when a freak accident killed her mother and nothing was ever the same for her again. With this shocking event begins Susan's struggle with insecurity, crippling shyness and guilt. Then, unexpectedly, she is given a chance to escape from these troubles. Yet even now she feels there is something lacking.

Years later another life-changing event resurrects ghosts from her past. Will she be able to untangle her past and confront her shadows? The outcome surprises Susan as much as it will the reader.

ABSURD TALES FROM AFRICA

ROBERT GURNEY

In his book A Night in Buganda, Tales from Post-Colonial Africa (2014), consisting of one hundred and forty-four tales, Bob Gurney struggled to make sense of the years he spent in Uganda in the nineteen-sixties. Democracy in that newly independent country was moving inexorably towards dictatorship. You could feel it happening. He and his fellow aid workers were told they were doing a good job but doubts assailed him. Things were falling apart. Was the effort invested about to be wasted?

Writing the first book helped him to put some of the pieces of the jigsaw puzzle together. In this book, Absurd Tales from Africa, he makes no such attempt to go any further. He explores gleefully the genres of the grotesque and the absurd. The reader is invited to go with the surreal flow and, perhaps, to enjoy the humour.

HAYTI

KURTIS SUNDAY

During the Spanish Civil War a German anarchist and historian serving with the International Brigade discovered an account of how a Florentine nun led a mission to Hayti, Spain's first American colony, two decades after its 'discovery' by Christopher Columbus. But she also had a secret assignment – to find out if the passage through to Asia depicted on a world map published by the German cartographer Martin Waldseemüller actually existed.

During her investigations, she meets up with Fray Hugo de Montenegro, a Dominican monk who has been there for several years and has been collecting accounts of Spanish atrocities; and she comes into contact with Taíno freedom fighters and their allies, escaped African slaves who had been imported to work on the new sugar plantations, as well as to the attention of the brutal colonial authorities.

The narrative unfolds against the background of the horrors of the Spanish Conquest of the Americas, the destruction of its original peoples, the commencement of the Atlantic slave trade and the beginnings of globalisation with the foundation of the Spanish Empire.

THE BALTIC FALCON

LYNN WILLIAMS

In the immediate aftermath of the Great War, the Baltic became a highly contested territory between those who sought independence, the imperialistic old guard, and the new Bolshevism which threatened to consume all before it. Into this frenzy of civil war poured the German Freikorps with its own agenda, though some viewed it as a liberating force.

Within its ranks were mercenaries, like Kessler, and secret patriots like Steiger, both of whom contribute to the narrative of The Baltic Falcon, which is more than just a novel of their time.

It is a story common to all wars and a romance without physical boundaries, or borders of time.

SINGLE OR DOUBLE?

JULIA HORTON-POWDRILL

When twins Cass and Jo leave the bright lights of Paris and London to meet their godmother's solicitor in a small, sleepy Welsh seaside town, they don't expect their lives will change at all. Instead, they find themselves embroiled in the weird and wonderful carryings-on in Porthcwm amidst its larger-than-life inhabitants.

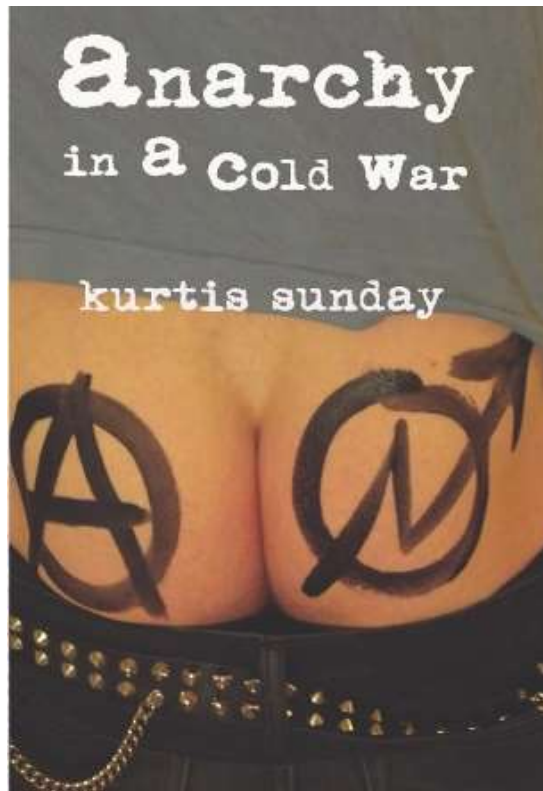

There's greedy and lascivious local estate agent Arthur Trinder; Gloria, the scantily clad, plastic surgery-addicted cleaner and wicked, tourist-scam inventor Bert Lloyd. Then there's the handsome, grouchy doctor, and excitable Rosa, with her miracle cowpat...

Was the arrival of the twins the catalyst for the drunken sandcastle competitions, and farmyard police raids? And is the older generation, both alive and dead, giving fate and romance a helping hand?

ANARCHY IN A COLD WAR

KURTIS SUNDAY

A novel of Berlin, living with the Bomb, Punk, protest and alternatives.

West Berlin in the 1980s, a city surrounded by a wall, razor wire and machine gun posts.

Like Germany itself, it was divided into four sectors after the Second World War. The American, British and French sectors have become West Berlin, while the Russian sector has become Communist East Berlin. The Berlin Wall surrounds the American, British and French Sectors, a capitalist enclave where there is much that is familiar and much that is not.

The Cold War is at its height and the nuclear missiles are armed and waiting in their silos.

There is no internet and perhaps NO FUTURE.

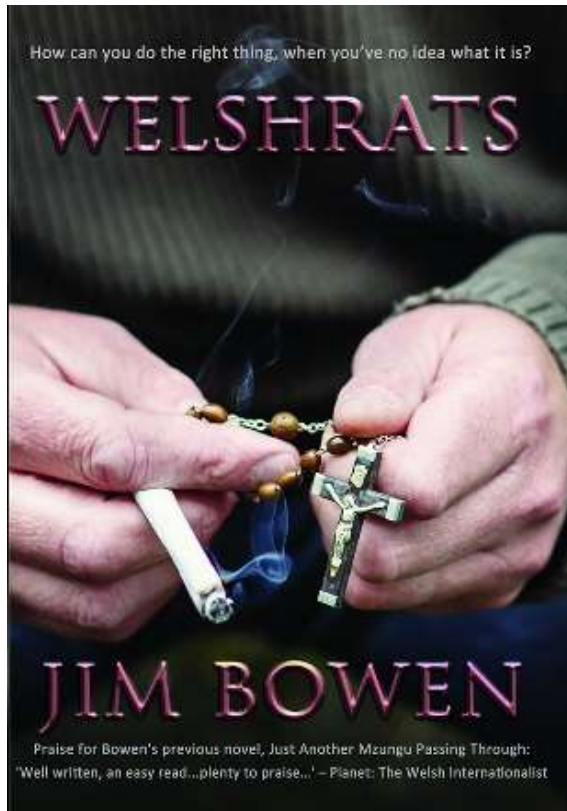

If nuclear war breaks out there will be a four minute warning.

Reality? Sur-reality? Or hyper-reality?

Then there are the squatters and the police

JIM BOWEN

Henry Antrim is a social worker hooked on dope and one night stands. His loathing of red tape and obsessive desire to do the right thing puts him in constant conflict with his bosses. He has his deceased mother's rosary in one pocket and a three pack of condoms in another. Set in Swansea's Catholic community in the mid-2000s, Welshrats by Jim Bowen is a highly topical, genre bending novel.

As a very real human being, Henry struggles to survive. Fumbling from one challenge to the next, he goes through a dark period in his life, but with luck, hope, and a great deal of help from his friends, he survives and ultimately triumphs, proving true his dying mother's adage: 'God never gives us more than we can carry.'

KURTIS SUNDAY

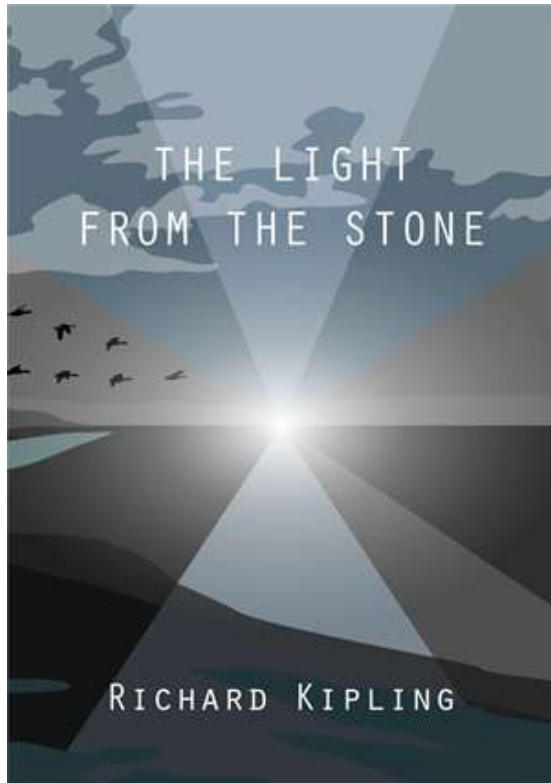

Paris, during the bloodiest days of the Revolution: a book entitled An Atheists' Bible is discovered by the authorities.

But what is An Atheists' Bible and who wrote this 'profoundly reactionary and perversely pornographic' book? It is set in 1759, when the government of Louis XV was in the process of banning Diderot's great Encyclopédie and the Seven Years War was raging, and purports to be a true account of how the printer Bageuret discovers a secret cache of the Encyclopédie in a Parisian warehouse and teams up with the aristocratic twins, Gilles and Sophie-Françoise d'Argenson, to sell them.

But finding buyers and smuggling the Encyclopédie out of Paris proves more difficult than anticipated. It has many enemies, including the Jesuit General and the fanatic Brass Head de la Haye, who are determined to see the death of the abomination.

And Paris is a city of spies and informers, a heaving metropolis where the notorious cabinet noir tries to keep tabs on everything that happens in the black market for illegal books.

SURFING THROUGH MINEFIELDS

BEL ROBERTS

Lauren, a 15 year-old English schoolgirl, is forced to stay with her grandmother in Wales when there is trouble at home.

With her pet dog, called Flea Bag, Lauren is plunged into a strange environment, where she soon makes as many enemies as friends.

For her GCSE History project, Lauren chooses to research the Senghenydd Colliery Disaster of 1913, in which over four hundred men and teenaged boys died. Besides reading the recorded views of historians, she enlists the help of locals, who have photographs and news cuttings relating to the tragic event. Lauren becomes so emotionally involved with her studies that the experience changes her attitude to life and makes her question her own family's social position.

Lauren's half term at her new school involves her in lots of problems and fun, and even sees her falling hopelessly in love with Justin, a brilliant, but disturbed, Year 13 pupil.
