GAME CHANGER

Adam Kramer
Quantum Prosthetics & Orthotics

Before becoming a certified prosthetist/orthotist, Adam Kramer built his career in adaptive recreation, working with people with disabilities and wounded veterans in the Chicago area. He later brought that experience to elite competition as an assistant coach for Team USA Women's Wheelchair Basketball and the University of Alabama's Adapted Athletics program.

His teams won multiple national championships, and at the Tokyo Paralympics, Team USA brought home the bronze. One of Kramer's athletes subsequently presented him with the US Olympic & Paralympic Committee's Order of Ikkos, an honor that allows Olympic and Paralympic medalists to recognize a coach or mentor instrumental to their success.

Today, Kramer brings lessons learned on the court into his work as a prosthetist. At Quantum, he combines advanced prosthetic technology with an understanding that mobility isn't simply about moving from one place to another. Sometimes it's about competing, belonging, pushing limits, and discovering just how far a body can go.

CHOICE

MOBILITY MENTOR

Allison Symsack
Walter Reed National Military Medical Center

For Allison Symsack, helping people with limb loss move better happens in two very different places: in the research lab and out on the field.

A physical therapist and rehabilitation researcher at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center, Symsack has spent years studying mobility, gait, and rehabilitation among people with lower-limb loss. Her research collaborations include longtime O&P researcher and physical therapist Robert Gailey, PhD, PT, and studies examining everything from mobility and balance among people with bone-anchored prostheses to home-based walking and exercise programs for people with lower-limb loss.

Symsack also puts that science into motion. She's one of the coaches leading the free Össur + Challenged Athletes Foundation Running and Mobility Clinics, which have helped thousands of people with limb loss and limb difference learn techniques for moving more confidently with their prostheses. Her philosophy reflects the long view she brings to that work: "Amputee rehab and recovery is a marathon, not a sprint."

CHOICE

ACCESS CHAMPION

Brian Little
UNC Health

Brian Little's career bridges two essential priorities in prosthetic care: advancing the technology itself and expanding access to the people who stand to benefit from it.

Now at UNC Health, the biomedical engineer and certified prosthetist/orthotist previously worked at Bionic Prosthetics & Orthotics, specializing in powered prosthetic knees and advanced upper-limb systems, including pattern-recognition technology.

His work has also explored more affordable approaches to prosthetic care, from 3D-printed partial hand devices to his involvement with Bionic Outreach. Earlier, he volunteered with e-NABLE to help fit children with 3D-printed hands and consulted on open-source prosthetic projects.

For Little, technological progress and accessibility are inseparable. His work reflects a commitment not only to advancing prosthetic technology but also to expanding who can benefit from it.

Nothing Bad Happened Today.

That's the whole idea.

No lost suspension. No cutting the day short.
No worries. Just a thin layer under your suspension sleeve, doing the quiet work of not letting anything go wrong.
