Ginny found true caring right at home.

GINNY W.
Patient

When her church elected her to serve on Adena's board, Ginny took the responsibility seriously. But it wasn't until she became a patient herself — enduring fractured bones and battling COPD — that she truly experienced compassion and dedication from caregivers who were also her neighbors. Today she is recovering, cheering on her grandson's little league games, and serving her church. Ginny is one of the many faces of our patients in the community we call home.

See Ginny's story and more at Adena.org/Faces.

HISTORY AS YOU

ON THE GO!

PAINT STREET

Walk Paint Street and step into layers of history, from church spires to wartime stories. The Wissler Building once hosted Officers Club No. 1 during Chillicothe's Camp Sherman days in WWI, when thousands of soldiers filled the city. The 1875 Italianate-style City Hall kept watch over downtown — its back wall doubling as the city jail until 1989. Nearby, St. Mary's Catholic Church (1869) once ran a busy school just around the corner on Fourth Street, though the building no longer exists. The Franklin House (1907), a Prairie Style gem, now houses a women's museum, while the Chillicothe Ross County Public Library (1906) still welcomes readers with its grand façade.

Memories of Camp Sherman linger on this street; the 20th-century Sherman Theater and Winter Garden offered soldiers live entertainment and showed movies on the old canal bed. Walk around the corner to the Elks Club at 42 W. Second Street and the Majestic Theatre (1853, Masonic Hall). Both played somber roles during the 1918 Spanish flu outbreak, which claimed over 1,100 lives; the latter location served as an embalming site for the camp's flu victims. The Ross County Courthouse served as a bustling info hub and the site where 20,000 troops celebrated the war's end, and the old 1906 Chillicothe Post Office saw local draftees board buses to training. Here, history is built into every brick.

WWI CAMP Built in 1917 on 2,000 acres at a cost of $4 million, Camp Sherman (the third largest training camp in the U.S. during WWI) trained 40,000 soldiers. In one striking moment, 21,000 men formed a living portrait of President Woodrow Wilson. Today, only the original Camp Library remains.

CENTER STAGE Paint Street once boasted grand stages; the Apollo, Orpheum and Clough Opera House all drew crowds to downtown.

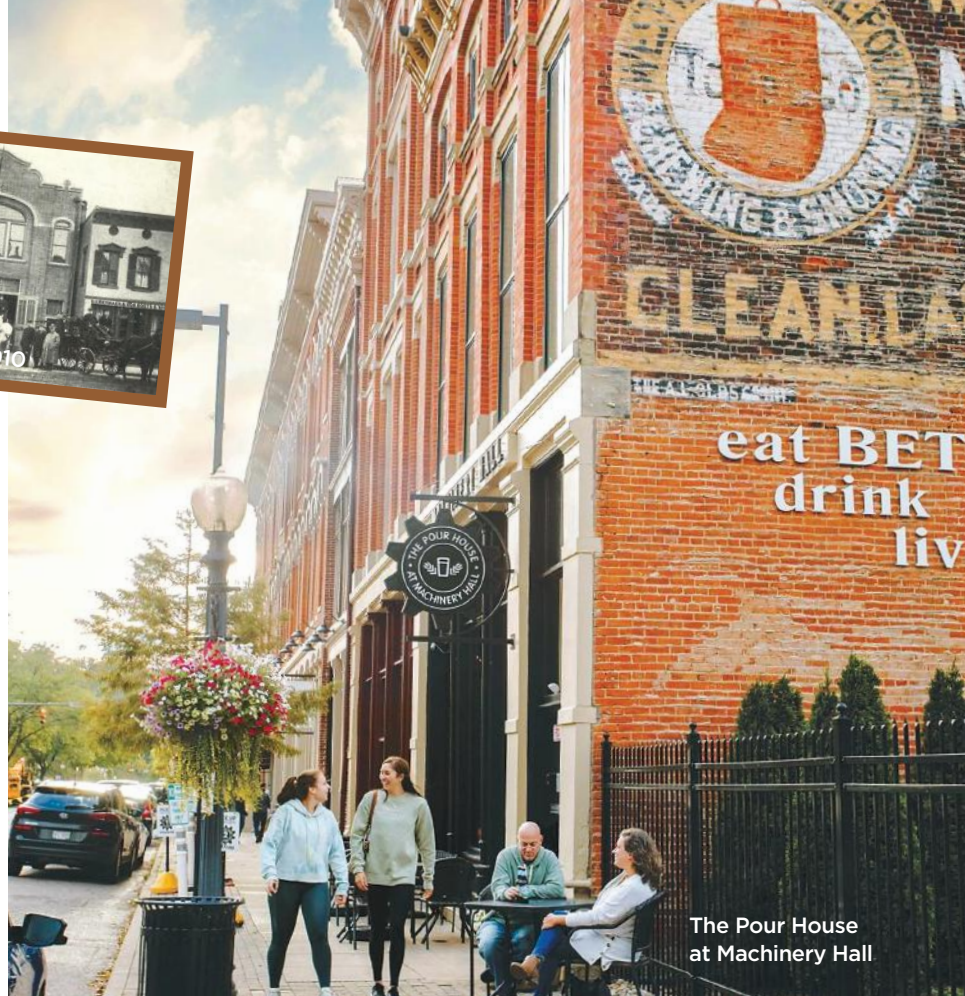

Ross County
Courthouse

SECOND STREET

Amble down Second Street and uncover stories in the brick and stone. At 70 E. Second St., the 1910 Fire Station #1 now houses a firefighter museum, its original charm intact (minus a garage added later). Nearby, the Majestic Courtyard lot whispers of its past as a hotel that stood here until the 1990s. The two neighboring buildings burnt down in 2006. The loss uncovered a rare gem: a 19th-century advertisement still clinging to the wall. Farther down, the West Second Residential stretch shows off centuries of architectural styles from Walnut to High streets. Federal, Victorian and early 1800s-style homes line the street, each telling a piece of Chillicothe's story.

LOOK UP AS YOU WALK!

Second Street's iconic arch was installed in 1907 by A.R. Wolf, owner of the Masonic Opera House. When the space changed hands in 1915, it became the Majestic Theatre, a name that still lights up Chillicothe's downtown arts scene.

WATER STREET

Canal Boat in Chillicothe, 1903

Start your exploration of downtown along Water Street, once a bustling thoroughfare along the Ohio & Erie Canal from 1831 to 1907. Picture canal boats docking beside many of the buildings still standing today.

At Second and Mulberry streets, a colorful mural traces the canal's winding path from north to south through Chillicothe. Walk further to admire the Masonic Temple built in 1904, an elegant Renaissance Revival landmark. On the Public Square, the Ross County Courthouse marks the site of Ohio's first statehouse in 1858. Nearby, a 1940 replica of the original statehouse stands as a reminder. Walk to the northwest corner of Walnut and Second streets and imagine seeing the Abram's Big House — once a hub for legislators and a War of 1812 barracks.

MAIN STREET

Main Street tells a story of faith and resilience through its historic churches.

Quinn Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church, founded in 1821 by African American worshippers seeking freedom from segregation, now stands in a 1990 building. The Glorious Church of God, built by German immigrants in 1846 with services performed in German, survived a fire in 1929. Nearby, two First Presbyterian Churches once stood — one from 1844-1894 and the other from 1894 until a fire burned it down in 1956. Though both are gone, their history lingers. Around the corner, St. Mary's Catholic Church (1869) at 61 S. Paint St. remains an enduring presence. Together, these sites reflect Chillicothe's rich spiritual heritage.

ANCIENT ANTHROPOLOGY Long before Chillicothe's founding, an Adena Burial Mound once stood on the east side of Paint Street between Water and Second streets. In 1798, Thomas Worthington built his first home in front of it. By 1813, the mound was leveled.

LASTING LEGACY Catholicism in Chillicothe grew with Irish immigrants who arrived during the Ohio & Erie Canal's 1826 construction. Today, St. Mary's (1869) on S. Paint Street and St. Peter's (1949) at Church and Water streets stand as testaments to their faith and community.

A GUIDE TO EXPERIENCING THE WORLD HERITAGE SITES IN OHIO.

To get the most out of a visit to the Hopewell Ceremonial Earthworks, Ohio's UNESCO World Heritage Site, start at the visitor center at Mound City. "The earthworks are so simplistic in looking at them, but so complex in design. It's important for people to go to the visitors center so they are able to understand what they are seeing," says Chief Glenna J. Wallace of the Eastern Shawnee Tribe of Oklahoma. "The staff there are so friendly and knowledgeable. Talking to them would greatly enhance anyone's visit."

Explore the earthworks by visiting the Mound City, which is believed to be a ceremonial center for the Hopewell culture. It's the only fully restored Hopewell earthwork complex with 25 mounds of varying sizes surrounded by a low, earthen wall. Mound City is also one of Chief Wallace's favorite sites, with good reason. "All of these earthworks are built near water, because waterways were their transportation routes," she adds.

“THE EARTHWORKS ARE SO SIMPLISTIC IN LOOKING AT THEM, BUT SO COMPLEX IN DESIGN.”

Mound City

"Mound City has developed a trail where you pass the mounds as you walk down to the Scioto River. You can just visualize those Native Americans coming down that same trail. It brings the site to life."

Once a major ceremonial hub, the Hopewell Mound Group was a destination that people traveled to on foot from across North America.

Nearby, Hopeton Earthworks has two massive shapes. The winter solstice is one of the best times to visit, when the sunset perfectly aligns with the embankment walls — demonstrating this ancient culture's scientific expertise.

Also in the area is High Bank Works; though closed to the public, this research preserve continues to shed light on this ancient culture. It included a large circle with the same diameter as the Octagon Earthworks' Observatory Circle in Newark — an incredible achievement since they are 64 miles apart.

Along a bend in Paint Creek, the Seip Earthworks has mostly vanished due to farming, but the foundations of the connected square and circle shapes — spanning over 120 acres — still remain underground. These earthworks were likely large gathering places. The central mound has been recreated, and then Seip, like other sites, uses interpretive mowing to reveal the rest of the earthwork shapes.

a creative way is ingenious,” says Chief Wallace. “People travel to see cathedrals and castles — things built with stone and concrete. The Native Americans built everything here just as complex, just as grand, but with Mother Earth.”

Originally, over 10,000 mounds dotted the region, but now fewer than 900 remain. Achieving World Heritage status for these sites showcases the uncommon genius of the people who created them.
